First user of the new computer scanner was Jo Arnold of Dorchester St., Wilmington. Barbara White is the library employee, (right). The Wilmington Memorial Library is now hooked into the Merrimack Valley Consortium; patrons can now access 15 libraries to borrow books. The new computer keeps files on every patron and will eventually hold every book in the library, replacing the card catalog. The budget for FY '88 contains a request for money for additional terminals to access the main computer. Currently the library has four terminals.

Conservation Commission challenges Wilmington town charter

by Arlene Surprenant

The Wilmington Conservation Commission is presently in the process of challenging the language of the town charter and the authority of the town manager to appoint personnel for the conservation department. Conservation members say their authority to hire new staff members comes from the Enabling Act of the Conservation Commission adopted at town Meeting in 1964. This act, they say, gives the commission as well as the board of health the right to hire its own personnel.

The issue appears to have come to a head with the appointment of new Conservation Administrator Libby Sabounjian, an appointment most members feel should have fallen to their board instead of Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski.

In a recent interview, Commission Chairman Chester Bruce played down accusations that the commission's action could be construed as a personal grievance against the new administrator or as political in nature, since Bruce himself had applied for the position.

"I just don't feel this is the way the Conservation Commission should be run under the law," said Bruce, adding the action is "not against her (Sabounjian) personally."

Members of this board, said Bruce, also take exception to a starting salary of $23,000 for the Conservation Administrator with a $1,200 raise expected in July, a figure which reportedly is higher than in neighboring towns; the fact that the new administrator does not meet all the requirements spelled out in the job description; and the fact that Sabounjian has complete control over the conservation budget. In short, added Bruce, the commission feels the recent appointment was illegal.

The commission is presently pursuing funds to pay for legal counsel in the case, either through an article at special town meeting or through a concerned citizens support group. Members are also seeking legal and other help from the Mass. Association of Conservation Commissions (MACC), the Conservation Law Foundation, and the Attorney General's office in Boston.

According to Conservation Secretary Ella Bellmore, who contacted the various agencies, they've all assured commission members it is within their rights to pursue legal action and they are "headed in the right direction."

At Monday's board of selectmen meeting, the other side was presented as commission members sought to justify the article requesting town funds for legal aid.

According to an opinion requested of Town Counsel Alan Altman by the commission in mid-February (and only received Monday), the town charter, as well as the Town Manager Act approved by the town in 1950, empowers the town manager with the necessary authority in this case.

Altman referred to a similar case in 1984 which helped set a precedent. In that case, Police Chief Bobby Stewart maintained he should have control over the appointment of detectives in his department. The outcome, however, was in favor of the town manager and proved "the range of authority in section 12a is startling and awesome, sufficiently so as to make an individual who was hungry for power envious at its reach."

During the meeting, selectman chairman Rocco DePasquale frowned on using town funds to, in effect, sue the town. He questioned why the board waited so long to take any action and learned that, though members had wanted to pursue this course, acting chairman Bob LaVita had admittedly "dropped the ball."

DePasquale, in seeking to avoid litigation, suggested commission members meet with Town Counsel, the Town Manager, and other interested parties to see if they could iron out their differences before taking the town manager to court, which would be the final step.

"That is not my intention to take the town of Wilmington to court. It is my intention to clarify the law," replied Bruce who agreed to sit down prior to town meeting.

Though he was relatively quiet on the issue, Stapczynski did say he felt confident "we're on pretty good ground here." He added it was a "shame" to hire another attorney when they had before them "a perfectly good opinion" which he felt would hold up in court. He also conceded the "law is broad" but explained that in any conflict the town charter prevails.

Shriners appeal decision

by Arlene Surprenant

The Board of Directors of the Aleppo Temple Shrine filed a suit with Middlesex Superior Court March 13 to appeal the February 9 decision of the Wilmington Board of Selectmen.

On February 9, selectmen unanimously refused to grant the renewal of an earth removal permit to the Shriners to allow the construction of a 1,100 space parking lot. Selectmen maintained that the ongoing operation didn't conform to zoning bylaws because of a gravel crushing operation on site. They also took into consideration neighbor's complaints of noise, dust, and damage to their homes from blasting at the Fordham Road location.

Shriners' attorney F. Alex Parra of D'Agostine and Levine claims in the suit that the selectmen's denial of a permit to continue operations "exceeds the authority of the board." He also maintains that the board's decision is "arbitrary, capricious, whimsical, and based on legally untenable grounds."

The Shriners are seeking a judgement that would make the decision "null and void" and would show that Wilmington selectmen have no legal authority to restrict or prohibit work on site.

When contacted by the Town Crier, Aleppo Temple General Manager William Manchester called the whole thing "an unfortunate situation." He said he had put a lot of time and effort into working with the board and neighbors. Though selectmen had asked the organization to come back with a different parking plan to address neighbor's concerns, Manchester said "I really don't see any other way of doing it (in a cost effective manner)."

An appeal hearing has been scheduled for April 3 at 9:30 a.m. in Middlesex Superior Court.

Town center public hearing Monday

Reminder: There will be a 25 percent design public hearing on the Rt. 129 (Town Center) project Monday, March 30 at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall Auditorium.

This will be the only public forum for Wilmington residents to ask questions and express their concerns about plans for a new Burlington Avenue Bridge and connecting roadways as well as a proposed re-location of Town Center.

Selectmen sign-off warrants

by Arlene Surprenant

The Wilmington Board of Selectmen signed both a special town meeting warrant with three articles and an annual town meeting warrant containing 37 articles at their meeting Monday night. Both meetings will be held at 1:30 p.m. on April 25 in the new high school gymnasium.

Selectmen are sponsoring an article to exempt three unique cases from the moratorium on the sale of town owned land. They are also strongly behind articles to establish a Wilmington Municipal Electric Department, to appropriate funds to study the best location for a fire sub-station and new town hall as well as to renovate the Wilmington police station; and to take a parcel of land on Salem Street by purchase or eminent domain.

The most widely discussed article at Monday's meeting, however, was Article 12 - to see if the town would appropriate $60,000 for the defense of several Appellate Tax Board cases pending against the Board of Assessors.

According to Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski, four major industries in town - Surface Coating Inc., Polyvinyl, Avco, and G.E. - have filed with the Appellate Tax Board claiming they are being over assessed by the Wilmington Board of Assessors. Though the town has assessed all four for a total of $66.9 million, the companies say their actual assessed value totals $43.8 million. The difference in the two totals, added Stapczynski, comes out to half a million dollars a year in taxes.

"It stands to cost the town a lot of money if we lose," Stapczynski told selectmen, adding that it would also pave the way for a "flood" of other industries coming forward seeking "their fair share."

Selectman Jim Stewart said it was his feeling if the town loses the cases it could "seriously impact" the residential tax rate in Wilmington.

The $60,000 appropriation would, in part, help pay for an expert appraiser and co-counsel to prepare a defense with Town Counsel Alan Altman.

Options explored for land taking

Wilmington selectmen explored options other than taking a parcel of land off Salem street by eminent domain at their meeting Monday night. The land was originally designated to be a yard by the MBTA. An article in the annual town meeting warrant seeks to obtain the land by purchase, eminent domain, or as a gift.

Selectmen were concerned with the wording of the article, saying in order to legally take the land, the town would have to have "an overriding public purpose" and demonstrate a definite need for the land. Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski said they could state the use when they go to court.

Both Jim Stewart and Bob Docuette urged that the town inquire if they could purchase the property from representatives of the MBTA as that approach has not yet been tried. Another approach mentioned was to use the property as a tool in ongoing negotiations

Board discusses IMG proposal

by Arlene Surprenant

Wilmington selectmen briefly discussed the IMG Proposal to put a mixed rental complex on land bordering Arlene Avenue and Ballardvale Street at their meeting Monday night.

Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski said the board of appeals has been receiving input from various boards as it awaits the next meeting with IMG on a comprehensive permit from the town. The town is also awaiting the results of an Environmental Impact Study.

Selectmen discussed possible points, such as density, parking, and other requirements they could use to try to negotiate with IMG. They recognized they could not negotiate anything connected with health factors or conservation.

Chairman Rocco DePasquale raised the question, if the town negotiates does it mean it accepts the concept of apartments. Then, in pursuing this line of thought further, he asked if the town accepts the concept, will it defeat the purpose of abutters?

DePasquale also asked why the town isn't negotiating to put the project in another, more favorable location, saying the town should determine where the project would be most acceptable.

"I don't think a 200-300 unit apartment building is acceptable anywhere in Wilmington," said Jim Stewart, adding that the only thing the Arlene Avenue site supports at this time is R-20 houselots. Stewart suggested they take the initiative and prepare their own proposal to let IMG know what would be acceptable to Wilmington citizens.

Monday's board of selectmen meeting in Wilmington will be shown on Channel 6 this Thursday (March 26) at 8 p.m.

Task Force eyes non-profit corp

by Arlene Surprenant

Members of the Affordable Housing Task Force will explore the possibility of using a community development corporation as a vehicle to work toward the state goal of more affordable housing in Wilmington.

At the Task Force meeting last week, Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski explained how such a non-profit organization has worked in other towns. He said a developer usually sells a certain number of new condo units or homes to the corporation which, in turn, controls them, handles the necessary funds, and works within the inclusionary policy of town bylaws. The corporation reportedly helps the task force cut through red tape and provide it with monies for creative efforts at low cost housing.

Member Ray Forest triggered the interest in such a vehicle when he expressed frustration with the lack of funds and bureaucratic "roadblocks" preventing action on prior proposals.

Stapczynski pointed out that there is a non-profit corporation already established in Wilmington in the form of the Wilmington Community Development Corporation. The organization was originally founded in the early 1980's by task force member Vaughn Surprenant and other residents concerned with the lack of affordable and elderly housing in town.

The task force will look into that organization and see if they can utilize it or its concept to start their own non-profit corporation.

Investigation to conclude

An ongoing investigation into a delay in ambulance response time the night school committeeman Mitch Spiris died is expected to conclude by the end of next week, according to Town Manager Buzz Stapzcynski. The investigation was requested by Spiris' daughter Suzi Cushing.

At Monday's board meeting, selectman Bob Cain asked that selectmen be kept informed of the investigation's progress, especially since Cushing had brought the matter to their attention.

Stapczynski said getting to the bottom of the delay is "an overriding concern of the (fire) chief and people involved," adding that "hundreds of hours" have already been expended on the investigation. He agreed to an executive session prior to the next board meeting to update selectmen on the facts, because any findings could have "far reaching implications."

In the event action needs to be taken against one or more employees, a special civil service process will be followed.

Fincom holds ho-hum hearing

by Arlene Surprenant

An audience largely composed of town officials and petitioners sat through a lengthy Finance Committee hearing Tuesday night to hear explanations and comments on 40 articles slated to come before voters at April's annual and special town meetings.

Though Fincom members asked many pertinent questions, most of the articles stirred little public interest. With the hour growing late, four rezoning articles as well as the planning board's article on the Webber Amendment were put off to next Tuesday's planning board hearing.

Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski went over some specifics in the budget portions of both warrants. Article One in the special warrant, said Stapczynski, is a housekeeping article to make up six projected deficits in such accounts as snow and ice removal, rubbish collection, and the miscellaneous account covering insurance and bonds.

In Article Five, Stapczynski went over specific budget recommendations for each department. He asked that Fincom approve an additional $53,000 for FY'88 to help pay for updating valuations to bring the town's values up to the 100 percent level required by the Dept. of Revenues. He also explained the engineering department will now be a division under the DPW and will fall under that department's budget.

In Article Six, covering capital expenditures for the town, Stapczynski explained there is a $34,378 balance left and asked that this go toward a much needed snow blower. This figure represents the difference in the Town Manager's recommended $247,000 figure and the bid figure of $212,622 for such items as DPW truck scales, five police cruisers, the fire chief's van, and truck replacements.

Though the Town Manager only recommended a total $66,000 be spent for capital expenditures for the school department, school officials pared down their original higher figure to the $126,000 total reflected in Article Seven. The funds would go toward "one time purchases" of various office and electronic equipment in different schools and departments.

Articles 10 and 11 on the creation of a town electric department and the appropriation of $125,000 for several related studies took up the most time. Town consultant Bob Patterson outlined a few options open to the town as well as benefits and risks in forming a town department.

Though Fincom member Walter Kaminski argued against "putting the cart before the horse" in voting for both articles concurrently, Stapczynski maintained they had to follow a specific process in order to make last April's vote count. He also explained Article 10 would require a ballot vote.

Tony Accardi inquired if the town were granted voting rights on the Reading Light Board would Wilmington still pursue the present course of action. Stapczynski said he would unless directed otherwise by selectmen.

"There's all the reason in the world to stay on the course we're on right now," said Stapczynski.

Two other articles which came under extended discussion were Article 14, to allow a swap of land so some members of American Legion Post 136 could rebuild their burned out hall in South Wilmington, and Article 16, to purchase or take by eminent domain MBTA land on Salem Street.

Fincom member Jim Gorham was concerned with switching land with such varying values. According to Principal Assessor Tony Krzeminski, one house lot of American Legion property on Middlesex Avenue is worth $100,000 and two lots would be worth $150,000. In comparison, five acres of land on Old Main Street, where the new hall is slated to go, would carry a value of $300,000 value.

Selectmen spoke in favor of the article, saying the switch would move the hall out of a residential area and, perhaps make the site available to the housing authority for a home for autistic children.

Discussion on Article 16 centered on a reason to take the land by eminent domain.

"It doesn't sound like we have a compelling reason to take the land," said Gorham. Town Counsel Alan Altman agreed this was a serious issue which needed more research prior to town meeting.

Carl Backman, who helped get signatures on a petition to take the property, said the parcel originally designated as an MBTA yard "isn't conducive to a neighborhood environment." The land could be used for open space or a buffer, officials said.

Chestnut Street resident Betty Bigwood gave a well prepared argument for making her street and Hillside Way "scenic roads" in Articles 30 and 31. She explained the intent of the Scenic Roads Act of 1973 is to preserve and protect, "not prevent anyone from doing anything." Bigwood said she would follow the wishes of homeowners on those roads. If the majority didn't want to have their roads designated scenic, she added, she would withdraw the articles at town meeting.

Other articles generating some interest were Article Three (special warrant) to transfer funds to the Conservation Commission for the secretary and legal expenses; Article 12 on several Appellate Tax Board cases; and Article 33, to amend a section of the zoning bylaw to allow homes having at least 1,600 square feet to be a two family dwelling as of the town meeting date.

Reading votes change in light dept

The Reading Times Chronicle called it "an upset." John H. Crooker, a veteran of many years of service on the Light Department of Reading was ousted, in the annual election in that town, held Monday.

He was replaced by Francis P. Gorgone. Gorgone received 978 votes to 855 for Crooker.

There had been a number of letters in the Reading paper prior to the election, on the situation with reference to the possibility that Wilmington would withdraw from service by the Municipal Light Department of Reading.

Mr. Crooker, a veteran of many years of service, and acknowledged as a competent person vis-a-vis electric utility lighting was probably ousted as a result of those letters. Gorgone promised the voters of Reading that he would "talk with Wilmington."

Alan Michel knows why he's voting for Michael McCoy.

To some people, all town officials are pretty much the same.

Alan Michel knows one who's very special.

He's Michael McCoy, who has spent the last three years protecting the people's interests on the town's planning board.

Alan Michel can tell you all about it. How developers wanted to rezone a wetlands area near his home for condos and how Michael McCoy responded to he and his neighbors concerns by opposing the proposal before the planning board.

And he'll tell you more. He'll tell you how hard Michael worked with him to learn the facts and defeat the measure.

And that's why he's working to see that Michael McCoy gets elected to the Board of Selectmen. Not just because of this one issue but because, as he puts it "Michael McCoy always voted for the town's interests."

You can tell what Michael McCoy will do by learning about what he has already done.

On April 18, 1987, make a difference, vote for Michael McCoy.

Dear Larz:

Wow! Neat-O! Cool! Blow Your Mind!! and more such exclamations are in order.

It may seem strange to say that the best seat in the theatre is in the last row. Even better if in the center. The luxuriously padded headrest and seat are so comfortable as you lie back and view outer space.

Most of us will never ride in a space shuttle into space and many will never ride in a helicopter among the tallest buildings in downtown Boston. But you can get the same effect by spending a mere $5 (adult) at the new Mugar Theatre in the Museum of Science, at the end of 93, or just a short walk from North Station.

The show lasts an hour - the most amazing hour of your life - don't miss it! Two million visitors are expected to see this program while it is here, so it is important to phone ahead (523-OMNI) to make reservations, especially with tourist season ahead. Sold out the opening day, word of mouth alone will make this the thing to see this year.

A seven story domed screen, a format 10 times larger than usual movies, amazing sound effects, increase the drama of this out-of-our-world performance. GO!

Tewksbury budget discussions

The Tewksbury Finance Committee will hold two public hearings in the near future to discuss the town's finances.

A public hearing is slated for Thursday, March 26, to discuss the town budget. A second public hearing, set for Thursday, April 2, will be an open forum concerning the warrant articles for the Annual Town Meeting in May.

Both public hearings will begin at 8 p.m. in Town Hall, and both are open to the public.

Frankly speaking

by Kevin John Sowyrda

When you walk inside the booth you may already have the answers right in front of you. In fact, a few old political hands are actually known to carry with them a list of names, which will make their task all the more easy. But most of us may not decide on candidates until we actually start hitting the levers in the voting machine. This holds true whether we're voting for a state office, or something more local such as the board of selectmen. And as we put everything into prospective, there are certain things that should matter, and others that should not.

As we decide who our candidate is, there are certain no, no's as to what should be considered relevant. A person's religious and ethnic backgrounds, as well as one's economic roots, should technically not be considered in this country - though wealthy candidates often seem to be grilled just a little bit more by the press. We're not even supposed to consider what sport teams they root for. Though a possible exception here could be if they are a Mets fan. And finally, you may want to also disregard certain campaign strategies. In other words, if you read something that says "Don't vote for candidates who put signs out", you may want to expand your criteria for voting just a little bit beyond that.

While you are sitting back, examining the field of candidates, especially those seeking election to positions which are unpaid, you really should consider who is most willing to work hard for your vote. If that's any indication as to how they'll work for you as a constituent, you might be looking at a good candidate. And one of the ways candidates work is to get as much visibility as possible. Naturally, a more economical way of doing this, as opposed to expensive newspaper advertising, is through campaign signs, which seem to be thankfully common in any free democracy. It is ironic that anyone would attempt to regulate something like that, when so many have fought and died to preserve the democratic process which some would seem so quick to constrain.

And another way of looking at the campaign sign issue, which for some reason has come up, is how offensive a political sign can really be to the old eye balls. No one seems to be complaining about any business signs in the community, with neon lights and all, that often times hang above us as we drive down Rt. 38. Therefore, why anyone should prevent someone from showing support for their candidate, on the property which they own and pay taxes on, is a litttle hard to swallow.

The bordering town of North Reading seems to be somewhat more enlightened on this matter. Lawn signs are very common in that neck of the woods and no one has ever suggested regulating that type of free expression. That's not to say that anyone should attempt to park a bulldozer on their property with a sign the size of a house. Granted, there may be limits as to what a neighborhood can take. Instead, North Reading is known for lawn signs, which should in no way be regarded as offensive, and are actually very small, physically.

So as you start to knock the old noggin regarding who your 'favorite son' or 'daughter' is, take a quick look at character, honesty, and their stand on substantive issues. As to whether or not they like to get their name out, I wouldn't hold that against them.

Stepping down

Joan Dunlevy, seated, sat through her final meeting with the Tewksbury Board of Health on Monday night. Dunlevy is stepping down as chairwoman of the board, having decided not to seek re-election. On hand for the presentation of a commemorative plaque were (left to right) board member Bob Rauseo, secretary Virginia Coviello, Public Health Director Bill McMenimen, board member John Lu, and recording secretary Linda Roy. Running unopposed for Dunlevy's position is Bill Lindsey.

25 years ago

The March 29, 1962 edition of the Town Crier of Wilmington noted that:

Photon of Cambridge would be located at 355 Middlesex Avenue Monday morning. The company leased for 20 years, the building recently erected by Waltham Door and Widow which was to move to a building next door.

"Rare Volume Night" would be held during Library Week (Apr. 8-14). Wilmington residents were invited to take any rare volumes they may own to the library for exhibit. Publisher Neilson volunteered his first edition Bowditch and his first edition Perry's Voyage to Japan including a copy of a picture forbidden by Congress.

SDJ Carter Lecture scheduled for April 7 would be "Holland and the Amazing Dutch" by John Roberts, former associate of Lowell Thomas.

Residents were invited to see, for 50 cents, a magic show including a man eating fire like a dragon and a dog doing the cha-cha. Mr. Magic was to be sponsored by the CDA.

Susie's Sonnets: "I doubt that we'll achieve a; lot there in Geneva."

"American Legion Post 136 sort of made it official Monday night. Rumors have been flying for a couple of weeks that they wanted to get out of their building on Adams Street and some of the members said so to the Selectmen." Among other complaints, Legionaires said the old building cost $650 a year to heat.

"What's going to happen, we don't know, but it looks like the old building may be torn down for one reason or another and if that should happen, we will be one of the people in Wilmington who will shed a tear for the old place."

The average residential owner in Wilmington is expected to save about 3.60 a year as the result of new rates by the Reading Light, effective April 1.

Bernard Ristuccia, president of Wilmington Sales, Wilmington Ford Agent, has had his salesmen win prizes for being "Top Hatters" and finally won one himself. He was pictured reciving the "Distinguished Achievement Award" from Richard Boutelle, district sales manager for Ford.

A sub-committee of the Planning Board was considering a change in the zoning bylaws that would allow garden type apartment houses to be built in Wilmington.

The town had 426 lots of land on which it had foreclosed by reason of unpaid taxes. Principal assessor Stanley Webber prepared a map showing the location of the various lots.

McNamara Tire was advertising an open house through April 14. Grand prizes included a set of Mohawk "premium" Strato Chief tires, mounted; four Connare retread tires, mounted and a free wheel balance - all four wheels. Advertised were Airflo Mohawk, 6.70x15 for $10.90 plus tax and Jet Chief 7.50 x 14, $19.95 plus tax.

A2/C Ruth Howell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Howell of Shawsheen Avenue was home on leave from Charlestown Air Force Base, S.C.

Eleanor Kemp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J.S Kemp of West Street made the dean's list at Barrington College, R.I.

Pat MacFeeley of Burnap Street was named chairman of the third annual Patriots Day Dance of the Republican Town Committee.

The Humble Farmer
Gramp Wiley saves his strength

With more and more people experiencing cardiac arrest during exercise classes, federally funded leisure programs are now viable.

Gramp Wiley, who is a living monument to the afternoon nap, recently discussed the situation with me from the confines of his old stuffed rocker.

"Here's another one in the paper this week," he crowed - "dropped in his tracks during a workout at the gym. I'm talking about a man who was willing to lay down his life for physical fitness."

"Heart attacks are bound to become more common now that people are starting to take care of their bodies," I said defensively.

"Back the good days men would come by heart attacks honestly," Gramp cried. "I remember when Weasel Fuller was around your age. The old fool had just married a girl young enough to be his daughter and one evening he showed up at the emergency room and said he'd had a heart attack. Well, he hadn't, but he told me later that he could tell just by looking what every one of those people on the hospital staff was thinking.

"Heart attacks are likely to get into the papers nowadays," Gramp continued, "but it's the little things - a broken wrist here from roller skating, a twisted ankle there from basketball - that are wearing the population down.

"Jogging, for example, does in more people than beer and cigarettes put together."

"I'd like to jog but I don' have time," I said.

"God didn't design man to run on macadam, but Joe jogged until he broke his hips down. Then he bought a bicycle which he pumped around town until cars pushed him off the road a couple of times."

"Stationary bikes are safe," I observed.

Gramp Wiley sighed. "Where but in America could people put any value on pedalling a stationary bike or jogging in place?"

"Swimming at the local health club pool is safe."

Gramp laughed - a bitter laugh - and said, "A lot of people think those pools are lighted. Swimming in most of them is like taking a dip in the Love Canal. Actually, drowning would probably be much more pleasant than wasting away with a skin infection.

"Then there's the exercise people get from protesting. From what I see on TV it's good for the lungs and legs. In some cities, back and shoulder muscles get a thorough workout from turning over cars."

"So there are some forms of exercise that you approve of, Gramps?"

My neighbor nodded. "Walking barefoot on hot coals is good. Increases your circulation in the winter and amazes your friends at picnics in the summer."

I said, "Even before heart attacks from exercise became common, you knew enough to sleep in your rocking chair. How long have you been milking the good from two-hour afternoon naps?"

"At least 40 years. I once read about a man who was 102. He bragged that he lived that long only because he'd had arthritis when he was a kid and had never been able to get any exercise."

To a friend

by Arlene Surprenant

Spring is a season of hope and renewal and new beginnings. It's a time to hold on to life and take special note of the outburst of greens and yellows and violets and blues. It's a time to revel in the gift of nature and all things living. It's a time of warmth as we joyfully bask in the long rays of the sun. And a time to push back the dark night and take pleasure in the light of an extended day.

Spring reminds us to catch and hold close the fleeting moment; to create memories now for the long winter ahead. Spring reminds us to get out and renew friendships placed on hold; to gather our strength for the long road ahead.

We are alive. What else matters? We make the most of each moment and give back more than we are given. We glory in earth's bounty and the fullness of life. We are in touch with our fellow man and realize all of us have to travel this same road at sometime in our lives.

We seek and we find. We recall the preacher's words:

"To every thing there is a season,
and a time for every purpose
under the heaven;
A time to be born, and a time to die;
a time to plant and a time to pluck up that which is planted."

Spring is the season of hope and renewal and new beginnings. And finally, if we accept our fate, spring can become, too, a season of inner peace.

First, last and only chance

The only chance Wilmington residents will have to make comments and ask questions about the designs for Wilmington town center will be Monday, March 30. The public meeting will be held at the Wilmington Town Hall in the auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

The Burlington Avenue Bridge and conecting roadways will all be affected along with many businesses. Traffic will be disrupted, re-routed and held up. Emergency vehicles will have to take alternate routes and plans for emergency situations in remote areas will be changed. Several streets will be made one-way during the reconstruction process.

If you drive through the center, own a business in the center, take the train from the center or live in Wilmington this will affect you. Your only chance to make comments to the state officials, town officials and representatives of the State Department of Public Works is Monday evening.

There is a map on display in Room 9 of the town hall. At the Chamber of Commerce (195 Main St., above Mr. Spumoni's) there is a model of the proposed development as well as the maps available for public inspection.

Speak now or forever hold your peace.

Dog problems

No season is more welcome than spring. After a winter of "cabin fever," who isn't happy to feel warm air and see bare ground again? Even non-gardeners have the urge to go out and work the soil.

Dogs also seem to love the spring. They, too, have been cooped up for the winter, and are eager to stretch their legs. Dog owners are also eager for them to be out of the house. Therefore, the dog officer receives an increasing number of complaints in the spring regarding loose dogs.

There is a leash law, which states that all dogs must be tied. Some owners just disregard the law. Others find it difficult to keep the dog tied, especially if the dog is either very strong or very smart. Some people let the dog out, "just for a few minutes."

Dogs running loose present many problems. In spring, the females come into heat. Last week, a woman called the Wilmington dog officer because there was a pack of dogs at her door. It seems that a female in heat had taken refuge under the back porch, and the pack of males was therefore attracted to the porch.

The scent of a female in heat sets dogs in a frenzy, and fights are not uncommon among dogs in a pack. Owners finding the family pet fighting in a pack place themselves at great peril if they attempt to break up the fight. A youngster trying to rescue his pet could be mauled.

Avoid the temptation to let your dog run loose. If you want to take your dog outside, leash him and take it for a walk. You'll be obeying the law while protecting your neighbors, your family, and your dog.

Tewksbury school budget discussed by Finance

The School Committee presented the town's Finance Committee with a proposed school budget for fiscal year 1988, but few Tewksbury voters turned out to hear the discussion.

The FinCom was handed a school budget for next year totalling almost $13.7 million.

FinCom member Joe Gill, who previously reviewed the school operating figures while sitting on the school budget subcommittee, presented most of the questions to the school representatives present. Gill's questions were spaced throughout the presentation, which lasted more than three hours last Thursday night.

Sitting in for the school system were Superintendant John Wynn and school business manager John Ryan, along with school board members Charles LaBella, Ben Maxwell and Bill Emerson.

The School Committee has not formally approved the budget, and the FinCom similarly took no action after the discussion.

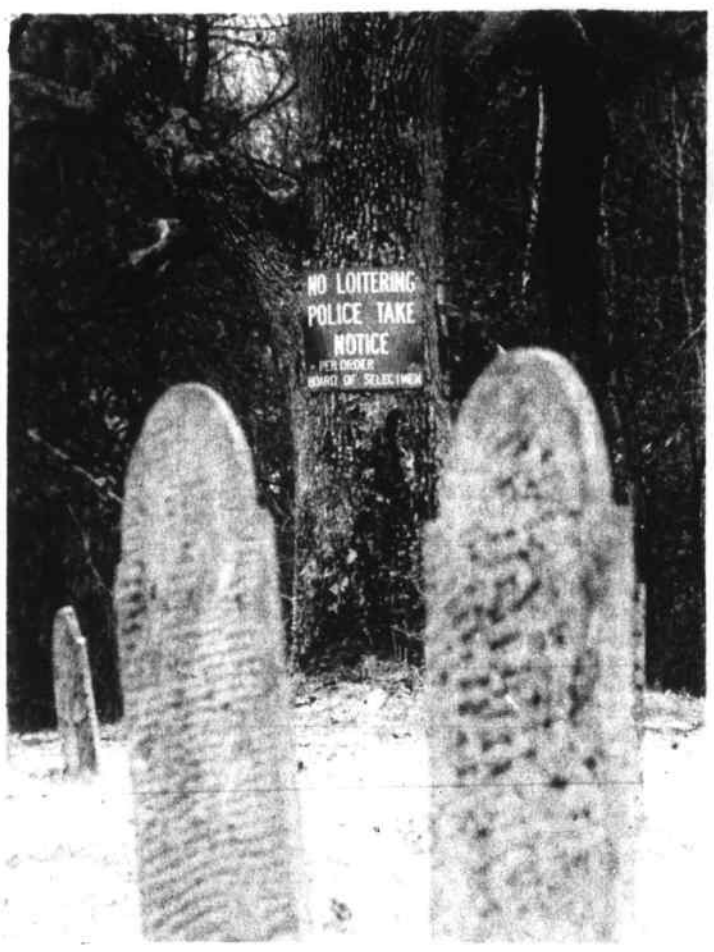

The school budget for the upcoming fiscal year includes an increase of $703,267 in the salary account; an additional $733,133 for the operating account; and a proposed capital outlay of $50,623.

Each of the budget increases was closely questioned by the FinCom during the discussion.

Asked if a list of budget priorities had been prepared, school business superintendant John Ryan told the FinCom that there was not. The school board would wait until cuts are ordered, Ryan said, before attaching a priority to any of the requests.

The FinCom has scheduled a public hearing for this Thursday night, March 26, at 8 p.m. to discuss the overall town budget.

The FinCom will soon be deciding upon budget recommendations for the Annual Town Meeting, where the town's budget will be placed before the voters.

Route 93 bridge repairs

Massachusetts Department of Public Works (MDPW) Commissioner Robert T. Tierney has announced that major reconstruction work will begin on March 24, on the bridges carrying Interstate-93 over Route 128 and West Street in Reading.

The work will involve complete replacement of both bridge decks and repairs to abutments. During the first phase of the project, a temporary detour road will be built in the I-93 median to channel traffic around the construction area.

Work will be permitted day and night, including Saturday and Sunday. During construction of the temporary median detour, traffic may be reduced to three lanes in each direction during off-peak hours. Four lanes of traffic in each direction will be maintained between the hours of 5 and 10 a.m. and 3 and 9 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Advance signing, suggesting that motorists "Seek Alternate Routes" has been placed 10 miles prior to the construction site in all directions. State Police will be located at the site to assist with traffic for the duration of the project.

The contractor for the $5,020,000 project is Bonacorso Construction Corp./Greater Boston Construction Co., Inc./F&A Construction Co., of Winthrop. The completion is scheduled for November 28, 1987.

Task force reviews PRD plan

by Arlene Surprenant

Members of the Affordable Housing Task Force reviewed a plan to set aside 12 units in a proposed condominium complex for lower to moderate income families at their meeting last Wednesday. At the same time, they recognized it would be a long and difficult process to establish the necessary criteria and wondered aloud how they could keep those units affordable.

Voters will be asked to approve PRD zoning for the 124 unit Townhouse/Condo project known as Whitefield Elm Village at April's annual town meeting. Attorney Joseph Courtney told members if voters approve the proposal, these will not only be Wilmington's first condominiums but the first time a developer agreed to set aside a number of units for affordable housing.

"What you're really going to be doing, if this works, you're setting a precendent," said Courtney.

At previous meetings the task force opted to follow an inclusionary housing policy as a guide to bring more affordable housing into town to meet state regulations. Under this policy, developers would be allowed to increase density in new subdivisions in exchange for setting aside a certain amount of units or homes for low income families.

Developer Dan Fonzi of Danco Development Corp has said he would sell the 12 affordable units for $109,000, with top priority going to Wilmington residents and their families,and the rest he would sell for between $142,000 and $175,000. All units would have similar exteriors and only be different in interior finish and amenities. The units would also be scattered throughout the three clusters of attached apartments so as to avoid the creation of a "little ghetto."

The 12 units, said Courtney, are "not an enormous impact, by any means, but yet they're a step in the right direction."

Most task force members backed the idea but said they would like more time to review the plan and try to establish some criteria for new owners. Chairman Jim Stewart asked that some of the units be set aside for first time homebuyers and the elderly.

Carole Hamilton, chairman of the planning board, recognized that establishing income and other guidelines is going to be "very much a tight rope act" adding "we're going to be asked to be all-seeing in this."

Fonzi and task force members were especially concerned with keeping the units in the affordable price range. Though Courtney saw this as "almost an impossible problem," others felt that protective covenants built into the deed could provide the necessary protection. Hopefully, though, this wouldn't prevent owners from upgrading their property.

"We would like to make this a model kind of development," said Courtney. Realtor Ray Forest seemed to speak for his fellow members when he said this approach to affordable housing "satisfies a need; a tremendous need."

Lions eye screening clinic a success

The Wilmington Lions Club, in association with Burlington Eye Associates, conducted a successful screening clinic at the Regional Health Center in Wilmington. Over 100 patients were evaluated in the two day event.

Chairman Mike Burns reported that some potentially serious problems were spotted in time to aid the patients. A number of people were recommended to have further vision testing. Others were advised of a probable benefit from a change in lens presciption to improve sight. The majority of participants were happy to learn that they had healthy eyes with good vision.

During the pediatric session, one girl was evaluated as dyslexic and referred for assistance. She will be in a better position when she enters school as a result of the early diagnosis of this learning disability. A couple of lazy eyes and a number of visual acuity problems were brought to the parents' attention for followup.

The adult screenings for diabetic eye disease and glaucoma also yielded some problem cases. There was one instance of macular degeneration detected. If left untreated, this would result in the loss of fine vision needed for such activities as reading. A couple of persons were identified as suffering from the first stages of diabetic retinopathy. The condition is a slight deterioration in the small blood vessels in the retina. As the disease progresses, additional blood vessel growth and swelling develops. Eventual rupture can occur. The progression causes severe visual loss, and even permanent blindness could result. New techniques, such as laser treatment, can prevent or delay the severe visual loss. A few instances of potential glaucoma were identified. The patients were advised to monitor pressure regularly.

Many people worked hard to make the event a success. Edith Cunningham and the seniors at the Wilmington Senior center handled much of the pre-registration. Drs. Phillip and David Gendelman, and Dr. Deborah Zuckerman were the opthalmologists who conducted the medical evaluation. Members and spouses of the Wilmington Lions Club, assisted by two members of the Lions softball team, aided in testing and ensured that all ran smoothly during the clinic.

The Lions look forward to conducting the event next year with an even better turn out.

Chairman urges board to support Aldo Caira

Saying Aldo Caira, Assistant Superintendent of Tewksbury State Hospital, is "being treated unfairly," Wilmington selectman chairman Rocco DePasquale urged fellow board members and Wilmington citizens to write a letter to the secretary of Human Services and state representatives in support of Caira's candidacy for the vacant superintendent's position.

At Monday's board of selectmen meeting, DePasquale said there have been "orchestrated allegations" of nepotism made against Caira which may cost him the job most people feel should be his. He said the furor began when four hospital employees, unhappy with how they were promoted, complained and triggered an investigation.

DePasquale, who serves on the hospital board, said Caira had made "substantial improvements" at the hospital and was a capable administrator who deserved the job.

Caira is the National Director of the Sons of Italy and a former member of the Wilmington Board of Selectmen.

Town Manager interviews end

The final interview was held last weekend for the Tewksbury Town Manager position.

According to Jerry Selissen, chairman of the Town Manager Screening Committee, the board spoke with Richard Bowen on Saturday, bringing the total number of interviews to seven.

Selissen said Bowen claims a bachelor's degree in government and finance from Colby College in Maine and a master's degree in governmental affairs from the University of Pennsylvania. Bowen also holds a juris doctor degree from Suffolk University, Boston.

Bowen served as town manager of Andover from 1964 to 1969, Selissen said, where he now practices law.

A second interview was slated for Saturday morning, one which was to be closed to the public, but Selissen said the candidate decided to withdraw his application. The name of the candidate was not made public.

A second round of interviews is tentatively scheduled for April 4, Selissen said, to narrow the field down to three for presentation to the Board of Selectmen for final approval.

Wilmington Women's Club hosted lunch to new citzens

Several members of the Wilmington Women's Club served a mini-luncheon to new citizens after their naturalization ceremonies at the Lowell Court House recently.

Justice Robert A. Barton presided at the session making 67 people citizens of the United States. Of these 13 were children. Several classmates came from Andover to watch as a friend became naturalized. The petition of 13 of the group to change their name was allowed at this time.

Master of ceremonies for the day was Edward Sullivan, Clerk of Courts of Middlesex County. He presented the candidates for their oath of allegiance, after which Justice Barton offered his congratulations and remarks. Mrs. Diane McLeod gave greetings from the City of Lowell. Other speakers were Dr. Mario Aste and Lydia Mattee of the International Institute of Lowell and Frederick Graham, associate executive director of the Greater Lowell Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Patriotic selections were sung by the A. Cappella choir of Lowell High School under the direction of Mr. A. Douglas Townshend. These included "Yankee Doodle;" "America;" "America, the Beautiful;" and dedicated to the new citizens, "People, People" (a song about the founding of Lowell) and "This is My Country."

Rich Charette, a singer and writer of children's songs, will perform for students March 30. The PAC sponsored program will take place both in the morning and afternoon.

Charette is a former classroom teacher who holds degrees in English and Music Education from the University of Maine. As a teenager, he taught himself to play the guitar and started writing his own songs, which now number over 100.

Charette has recorded three albums for children. These are "Bubblegum and Other Songs for Hungry Kids," "Alligator in the Elevator," and "I've Got Super Power." His repertoire is very popular with both children and parents since he involves the audience in most numbers.

ON YOUR FEET
INGROWN TOENAILS
Ingrown toenails are one of the most common complaints that cause people to seek the attention of a Podiatrist.
This disorder is usually caused by inherited abnormal curvature along the sides of the toenail; thickening of the nails as seen with a fungal toenail infection; and is aggravated by shoe gear. Rarely it may be caused by a bone spur pressing on the underside of the nail.
Following a thorough examination we will discuss our findings and treatment modalities. Correction is usually aimed at removal of the offending portion of nail and eliminating any infection that may be present. These procedures are done in the office operatory under safe local anesthesia. New techniques allow for faster recovery and earlier return to normal daily activities with minimal post operative discomfort.
It is important to remember that people with impaired circulation to the feet and lower legs are more prone to infections caused by ingrown toe nails. These people should seek prompt treatment for their foot problems. Periodic foot examinations are recommended to help prevent any future foot problems.

Residents fight Raytheon plan

by Frank Bonfilio

A huge crowd appeared at the Tewksbury Appeals Board meeting on Monday night to listen to an plea by the Raytheon Company to renovate the Battle's farmhouse on North street.

The current Raytheon plan is to use the farmhouse as a training center. A special permit for the operation is required from the Board of Appeals.

The Battle's farmhouse was built during the 1700s, and many of the residents in the area expressed worries that if the home was used as a training center for Raytheon employees, it would take away from the historic value of the home. Another argument raised is that the house is currently in the process of becoming a historical landmark.

The appeal for Raytheon was made by Leigh A. Peritz, manager of construction and renovations for the firm. Peritz told the board that the Battle's farmhouse renovation will not only be good for Raytheon, but for the Town of Tewksbury as well.

When asked how the house would be changed, Peritz said "The actual shape of the house will not be changed, but the interior will be totally renovated to accommodate the amount of people which will be trained there."

The proposed Raytheon plan is to renovate the inside of the house and use it as a training center for the employees of Raytheon's Apple Hill Technology Park on North Street, located next door. The plan, which is still in the early stages, is to fix the inside only and leave the outside alone to keep its historical value, Peritz said.

Tewksbury attorney Jay Gaffney, who represents a town historical society now under formation, stated that "changing the interior of the house would take away from the historical value of the home."

Gaffney pointed out that "it would be interesting to the public to see how the changes (to the house) were made over a long period of time."

Gaffney also told the board that, "we are out to preserve the interior of the home, not just a shell." He said the historical society would prefer that none of the original masonry or woodwork would be removed, and that the house would have reasonable access to the public for those who wished to tour the building.

Although the historical society has not been formed, Gaffney said he has spoken to several people who are interested in forming such a group.

Gaffney said that a phone poll was made about the Battle's farmhouse and that there was enough response to the poll that he felt some form of historical society should voice an interest in the Raytheon project.

Courtney invokes Cain amendment

Tuesday, March 24 the Fred Cain amendment suddenly showed up, in the Wilmington Board of Appeals. Attorney Joseph Courtney invoked it, in a 5,000 foot houselot case on Faulkner Avenue.

The Fred Cain amendment was, and maybe is, a special statute voted by the state legislature about 20 years ago. Representative Fred Cain of Wilmington introduced the bill, and it was voted.

Shortly before the Fred Cain bill was introduced, the legislature had voted that any 5,000 square foot lot, with a 50 foot frontage, in Massachusetts could become a valid building lot. One builder, who did not live in Wilmington seized on that law, and was building homes on 50 foot lots in several parts of town.

The lots were was just too close, for the people of Wilmington, who live in a town without adequate sewerage. Somebody told Fred Cain about it, and he provided an answer.

Fred filed a bill in the legislature amending that law so that Wilmington and Wilmington alone was excepted. The key to his filing was that he did it on the day the Red Sox opened in Boston, in 1969.

In the state house no one was paying attention to anything except the ball game, and besides, most of the legislators were down in Fenway Park. The bill carried, right through, and not until after it had become a law was any other legislator aware of what happened.

It was, to those who knew of it, a smart move by Rep. Cain.

Courtney argued that this was a "grandfather case." The house lot was in existance before the Fred Cain amendment was voted, he said, and the grandfather clause was never repealed. He admitted that might be a "moot" point.

Bill Hooper, who always represents the town of Wilmington at the Board of Appeals hearings had to go digging into his files for that one. He brought out that in 1979 or therabouts a new law, called 40A, was voted.

Chairman Bruce MacDonald listened to Hooper. Hooper said the minimum lot size in Massachusetts was now 7500 square feet, with a 75 foot frontage.

MacDonald said "I will deny it." But, I suspect, the attorney will bring this up in court. See you then."

The two men shook hands over that.

Many of the appeals asked for were granted. Some were not.

An appeal for a special permit for a home at 311 Middlesex Avenue was denied.

An appeal by Albert J. Spada, to divide a lot of land having 3.12 acres, off Chestnut street into three houselots was denied. Mr. Spada's home is in a rural (60,000 square feet) area.

William McCormick of 17 Kilmarnock St. got the surprise of the evening. He appeared with his son-in-law, Allen Harding. He was seeking to divide his houselot into three parts, using hammerhead style lots. It seemed that the proposed roadways would not be wide enough, and McCormick was, to all purposes, defeated.

But Chairman McDonald, by questioning, developed that the Boston & Maine Railroad had taken 12 feet of his land, for its right-of-way.

"This" said McDonald "is a hardship." McCormick had won his case.

The Fourth of July Committee won kudos from persons who, it was felt, would be in opposition. They were seeking their customary variances, such as had been granted the year before for the Fourth of July holiday; John Sanborn and Bob Woods were present, waiting their turn to speak.

"If it is to be run the way it was run last year" said Woods, "I have no complaint at all." Sanborn didn't say much, but he seems to agree.

This time the Board of Appeals extended its congratulations to the Fourth of July Committee.

For many, the 1986 IRA contribution will be their LAST CHANCE for full deductibility!

STARTING WITH THE 1987 TAX YEAR...

A person filing an individual return with an adjusted gross income of less than $25,000, and a couple filing a joint return with an adjusted gross income of less than $40,000, can continue to make deductible IRA contributions. Deductibility will then phase out for individuals with incomes between $25,000 and $35,000, and for couples with incomes between $40,000 and $50,000. For example, a married worker with an adjusted gross of $45,000, making an IRA contribution of $2,000, will be able to deduct only $1,000 instead of the full $2,000.

In all cases, the tax-deferred status of IRA investment appreciation remains. Those who are not permitted by the rules to make deductible contributions will still be permitted after-tax contributions to take advantage of the IRA's internal tax-deferred appreciation.

So, if you don't have an IRA, it will pay you to go to your nearest Lowell Five office to open one. And if you have an IRA, be sure you make your 1986 contribution.

Low score on writing test

Trahan score disappoints

by Bill Conlon

The results are in from the state's Basic Skills Testing program, with only one flunking grade received in the town -- at Tewksbury's Trahan School. The program and test scores were discussed at last Wednesday's meeting of the School Committee.

The test, given to a total of 788 students in grades three, six and nine, measured basic skills in reading, writing and arithmetic. Excellent scores were posted from Tewksbury's Heathbrook, North Street, Dewing and Trahan schools, with only one notable exception.

The third grade youngsters in the Trahan School were handed a failing grade for the writing portion of the test. Only 45 percent of the students were considered to have passed, out of the 55 youngsters who took the test.

The reading test at Trahan, however, resulted in generally good scores. More than 90 percent of those tested received passing scores on the reading test.

"I can't understand how anyone can read that well and write that poorly," said Dr. Edward Farley, assistant school superintendant for instruction during the School Committee discussion last week.

According to Farley, the test was taken over a two-day period. The first day had students make up an outline and then prepare a draft of the required writing during a 45-minute interval.

The next day, the youngsters were given another 45-minute period to produce a final version of the writing.

Farley told the school board that eight of the test answers were determined to be "off the topic," while another four were too brief to evaluate.

School Superintendant John Wynn told the committee that the material offered for the writing test, which he called "Prompt Number Three," was the toughest one to answer, statewide. Wynn said the number three writing test produced a statewide failure rate of 10 percent, the highest failure rate of all.

But the Trahan School has been long under a cloud concerning aptitude tests.

Last summer the Iowa basic skills test resulted in scores from the Trahan School almost 10 percent lower than from the town's other elementary schools. Other tests in the past have revealed similarly low scores for Trahan.

In response to the recent poor writing scores, School Committeeman Bill Emerson made a motion to conduct a retest for the Trahan youngsters, seconded by Ben Maxwell. Providing the evaluators for the retest, however, came under discussion.

Maxwell admitted that it would be necessary to "do our own scoring," he also asked for outside scorers, to provide objectivity. The board unanimously agreed to seek out-of-town personnel to evaluate the retest of the writing exercise.

Charles LaBella amended the article to have the results made available to the school committee as soon as possible.

"Until we have a retest, the jury is still out," said Superintendant Wynn, concerning the Trahan School. "This is not something we're treating lightly."

Wrong neigborhood. . . again

On February 5, two Lowell men were arrested on West Street, Wilmington. They had broken into the home of Paul Butt, and the police nabbed them.

It was almost a repeat performance at the house of Paul's father, William Butt of West Street on Tuesday, March 24. Paul was driving by and noticed a car parked near his father's home.

He flagged down Officer Vassallo, whose car was nearby.

Two young men ran out the back door and into the woods. They were captured in the area between West Street, the Ipswich River and Route 93. The river, it seems, was too wide.

Officers Celata and Hancock arrested Dennis W. Marr of 2 May St., Lawrence age 20 and Richard J. Maynard, 18, of 96 Richardson Rd., Chelmsford. Taking part in the wide spread search were Deputy Chief Nally, Lt. LaRivee, and Officers Spencer, Shelley, Neville and Vassallo.

The two men were charged with breaking and entering a dwelling house in the day time; larceny; and receiving stolen property, to wit, a 1986 Chevy Monte Carlo, stolen in Worcester on Sunday.

It is interesting to note that several police officers live in the neighborhood, a retired state police officer, three Wilmington officers and a Reading officer, all within a quarter of a mile.

Illegal signs ...

This photo, taken if February, shows three illegal temporary signs along Main Street in Tewksbury. Building Commissioner George Nawn had just announced a crack-down on illegal signs in the community.

... disappear

Just one month later, the signs are gone. According to Nawn, some 85 illegal sign violations were noted, and most have since been corrected.

Crack-down shows results

by Bill Conlon

It's spring cleaning time in the Building Commissioner's office in Tewksbury.

Illegal signs in Tewksbury have all but disappeared and Building Commissioner George Nawn is now setting his sights on abandoned and unregistered vehicles in town.

Nawn ordered stricter enforcement of the zoning by-laws dealing with signs, and the results have been noticeable.

Building Inspector John "Chuck" McCarthy noted that some 85 sign by-law violations were issued, and all but a few have since been corrected.

Nawn took out a paid advertisement in this newspapaer to warn violators that illegal and improper signs would have to be removed, particularly the temporary signs along Main Street. His office staff then began issuing violations and making follow-up phone calls, and all but a few of the signs have been removed.

"Everybody is always interested in cleaning up the town," Nawn said.

Next to go, Nawn warned, would be unregistered cars.

According to McCarthy, the town zoning by-laws allow only one unregistered car on a residential lot, provided the vehicle is parked at least 50 feet from the road. Some properties in town, he said, hold more unregistered vehicles than the law allows.

McCarthy also noted that a fine of $100 a day could be levied if the cars and trucks are not hauled away.

"The neighbors are complaining, and that have a right to," McCarthy said of the offenses.

McCarthy stated he is currently working full time on the Building Commissioner's staff, but his is only listed as a part-timer.

McCarthy mentioned that Nawn is trying to get approval from the Board of Selectmen to keep him on full time, to keep pace with the office workload.

And that workload will increase in the very near future, once the vehicle campaign gets underway.

Spring cleaning continues ...

Cable TV reception prospects improve

The prospects for improved tv reception in Wilmington are improving, Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski told a meeting of the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce Tuesday morning. He spoke at a breakfast meeting in Stelio's Restaurant.

The Greater Boston Cable Corp (GCBB) operates the cable tv in Wilmington. Their base of operations is on Zion Hill in Woburn. There have been complaints to the town from local residents who were unsatisfied with both the programing and the reception.

An agreement was signed last June with GBCC, after negotiations which had lasted over a year. That agreement calls for a Supertrunk, from Zion Hill to Wilmington.

GBCC has agreed to upgrade the number of channels available to 54, and this is to be completed by the end of the year. It has also agreed to certain "consumer language" in that the list of subscribers in Wilmington will not be sold to other parties. This will prevent Wilmington residents from getting "junk mail" as a result of their being a local cable tv subscriber

GBCC wanted a local office. They now have one, in the town hall. Their office will be open from five to eight p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and on Saturday from 9 a.m. to noon. This agreement lasts until the end of the calendar year.

Wilmington will have three channels for local cable tv. One can be labled Public, one can be labeled Education, and one Government.

This is as a result of complaints by the citizens. Wilmington is an active community, Buzz said and "We will have active access channels."

We will have a local committee in charge. Sue Mahoney is experienced in cable tv, and will be working with the Chamber of Commerce, to get the town involved.

Ed Rideout is a man who is experienced in motion picture photography and programming.

Beth Goldberg of the Regional Health Center is excited about the prospects. She is experienced in the production of videos, the kind that many like to see in their homes.

Beverly Shea, the high school librarian, will work with the high school students, the younger generation. It will be an opportunity for them to learn script writing.

In Wilmington there will be 12 access sites. There will be the football field, the gazebo on the common, the health center and places in public schools.

The tv channels will be accessed by a non-profit corporation being set up by Wilmington. It is being created to access, manage and operate public, educational and governmental access to the three channels.

Breakfast meeting

Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski, Ed Rideout, Sue Mahoney, and Beth Goldberg pose for the photogapher at Tuesday's Chamber of Commerce breakfast.

The GBCC will fund the town with five percent of its gross revenues on an annual basis. We received the first $125,000 in February, with which to purchase video equipment. One room in the high school is being designated the studio. Forty thousand will be used in setting up that room. There are also three more payments of $20,000, to be spread over 10 years, for refurbishing equipment.

The persons named by Stapczynski are, in a sense, the beginning of the corporation. They will be recruiting a staff, persons to draft and accept bylaws, and other programs. It is expected that there may be 20 or more persons on that committee, and that a few will be on a pay schedule, for maybe quarter or half day periods.

Surprenant seeks second term

Vaughn R. Surprenant has announced his candidacy for re-election to the five year seat on the Wilmington Redevelopment Authority.

Surprenant, who has been active in the community, has cited his concern for Wilmington's future development as the prime reason for his candidacy.

"I perceive my role on the redevelopment authority as one of decision maker, coordinator, and planner, especially as relates to the proposed Rt. 129 Traffic Improvement project and a sorely needed vibrant new town center. Such a center will not only provide the town with an expanded tax base and future employment opportunities but will clean up our present center area and allow our townspeople to shop locally. It might even give us a chance to provide a movie house for our children to give them a place to go in town."

In his first term on the redevelopment authority, Surprenant was a driving force behind the long overdue completion of the Jewell Industrial Park. This was done in an environmentally sound and fiscally responsible manner. Through the sale and development of the industrial park, the authority now has the seed money needed to better serve the community in such projects as the new center and in finding alternatives to alleviate the serious traffic problems which the town now faces. Surprenant feels strongly that unless steps are taken now to control growth, the situation will only get worse.

Vaughn R. Surprenant has been with the Home Office of a major property and casualty insurance company since 1967. He is currently the Director of New Office Development. In this capacity he is responsible for the opening and staffing of new offices throughout the United States and Canada. In addition to his regular responsibilities, he also acts as liaison between his company and many major corporations. For these and other accomplishments, Surprenant was awarded his company's "Manager of the Year" award for three consecutive years.

"My background in corporate management, one that stresses accountability for fiscally sound business decisions, will continue to enable me to help our town plan for and move responsibly into the 21st century."

Surprenant also stressed if and when the Rt. 129 project moves ahead and the town center changes become a reality, we must make sure everything possible is done for present homeowners and retailers who may be displaced. "This is perhaps more important than the projects themselves as the people must come first," Surprenant said.

Surprenant, a Marine Corps veteran and a graduate of Adelphi University, also holds a Masters Degree in business from NYU. He has completed graduate work at the Whitmore School of Economics, the University of New Hampshire, and the Graduate School of Sales and Marketing at Syracuse University.

Surprenant is also a member of the Wilmington Affordable Housing Task Force, president of the Wilmington Community Development Corporation (non-profit), and a member of the Wilmington Sons of Italy.

Surprenant and his wife Arlene, a reporter, reside on Reed Street with their three daughters Stacy, Heather, and Kimberly.

Make and take

The annual Chapter I Parents' Advisory Council "Make and Take" workshop was held March 10 in the conference room of Wilmington Memorial Library. The theme for this workshop was "Helping Your Child to Develop Study Skills and Good Work Habits."

Mr. Laabs commended the parents for their participation and noted that their attendance was the greatest of the 18 programs that he evaluates.

The final Chapter I meeting for this school year will be held May 6 at 3:30 p.m. in the conference room of Wilmington Memorial Library. At this meeting election of PAC officers will be held and students will present samples of their work.

O'Brien Roofing

Changes name as it expands services

O'Brien Roofing and Siding has announced a company name change to The O'Brien Company, Inc. The Tewksbury based firm, which specializes in home improvement services, has been serving the Merimack Valley for over 12 years.

Built on the dedication of one man, O'Brien Roofing and Siding was founded in 1975 by Tewksbury native Kevin O'Brien who quickly gained a strong reputation for quality service and skilled workmanship. As the industrial, business, and residential communities of the Merrimack Valley grew, so did the need for O'Brien's home improvement services. William O'Brien joined his brother's growing company to handle business management, marketing and customer service. Working together, the O'Brien's expanded the company's services to include building custom homes, additions, decks and garages, and remodeling interiors. In 1986 the O'Brien Homes division was established.

Today, The O'Brien Company Inc. employs a highly skilled workforce including a graphic interior designer. Kevin O'Brien continues to maintain the role of technical expert, and closely supervises all phases of job scheduling and production to insure top quality performance.

Dedicated to maintaining their long-standing commitment to customer service, The O'Brien Company Inc. stresses the importance of preventative home maintenance, and offers customers a comprehensive home evaluation. O'Brien home improvement specialists will check the over-all efficiency of homes, including windows, doors, insulation, ventilation, roof, gutters and the condition of exterior siding. Based on this evaluation, they will make recommendations on how to remedy immediate deficiencies, as well as prevent future damage. O'Brien maintains that through good preventative home maintenance over the years, homeowners can avoid unnecessary and costly home repairs.

Born and raised in Tewksbury, O'Brien brothers attribute the success of The O'Brien Company Inc. to the support they've received from businesses and homeowners in the Merrimack Valley. Although their company has grown quickly and its name has changed, their values have not. The O'Brien Company Inc. will continue to offer only the best in personal service and quality workmanship.

Wilmington senior topics

Open enrollment

The 1987 BC/BS Medex open enrollment period will close April 30. This is the only time this year when a person 65 or older without a supplement medical policy has the opportunity to enroll in a Medex policy. Any person who applies for Social Security benefits at 65 will at that time receive Medicare A&B Federal hospital and physician insurance coverage. At that time you are also allowed to enroll in a BC/BS Medex policy. The open enrollment period is for those who did not apply for Medex supplement coverage at that time. It is also for those who wish to change to a higher or lower insurance. The lowest coverage is standard and the highest is Medex 3.

We have already given out the 30 applications we received for the open enrollment period. We are still receiving calls for applications. I have called BC/BS for more applications. They should be at the center by the end of the week.

Telephone reassurance

We have many seniors homebound receiving telephone reassurance calls because of frailty of age or illness. If you are homebound and would like a call contact the office, 657-7595. Sometimes illness or loneliness is not as bad if we talk about it with another person who understands what we are going through.

Supplemental

Supplemental Social Security Income (SSI) is a valuable resource for many elders. It provides additional income to those living on less than $488.82 for an individual or a single person who is blind $509.74 or disabled $474.39. For a couple the figures are couple, $731.72, blind $997.49 or disabled $710.06. To qualify you must not have more than $1,800 for an individual and $2,700 for a couple in resources. If you do qualify for SSI you also qualify for Medicaid which provides full medical care coverage, fuel assistance and food stamps.

If you feel you qualify, contact the Social Security Office in Lowell.

Celebration April 9

We are in the process of signing up for our first Buzzzell Senior Center anniversary celebration. If you have not signed up, call the center or drop in to let us know you will be at the center on April 9 to celebrate the seniors' greatest accomplishment to date.

"Nunsense"

We were only able to get an additional 30 tickets to the Nunsense play. We were hoping we could get more but the play is sold out for the matinee on the 30th of April. A waiting list has been started. Cancellations will be expected. If you want to go, call the center and have your name added to the list, we will call the names as the cancellations come in.

Transportation

The Council provides free transportation to seniors without transportation of their own to medical appointments and other elderly related travel. Medical appointments and other elderly related travel. Medical appointments are a priority. But it must be remembered we only have one van and it can only be in one place at one time. If seniors could check with the nurse when making return appointments to see if another of our seniors has an appointment within a day or so of your return appointment. Have yours made on that day it will alleviate an extra trip to that doctor. The best time to make medical appointments especially out of town is between 11 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. The traffic in Wilmington is horrendous in the afternoon. The later your appointment the longer you will have to wait for a return trip.

Sing-a-long

The sing-a-long and dancing is held Wednesday afternoons starting at 1:00. This is a social afternoon for seniors. If you want to dance, the floor is all yours; if you wish to sing just gather around the piano. No matter what your troubles are, music is a wonderful way to make them more bearable.

Art class

The art class has resumed. We have 13 seniors signed up. Some for painting others for sketching. If you want to join the class, it is held Tuesday afternoons from 3:30 to 5:30.

• Raytheon...

Raytheon was apparently not prepared for the presentation and stated that they were not able to make any plans because the current resident's lease does not end until late August.

Peritz stated that they did not want to disturb the privacy of the residents with teams of surveyors and planners.

But the appeals board wanted more solid information on the plan for the renovation and was hard pressed to get it.

"Much of this is vague," said board member Lou Carciofi. "How much information can you give for this program about the by-laws and safety laws which this program will entail?"

Board member Don McKinley also stated that "the question in my mind is whether you are ready to make this presentation and are you prepared fully to answer the questions on what you are going to do?"

Mixed views were conveyed by the public at the meeting. Paul McDonagh of North Street said, "It seems that you (Raytheon) can't come to a good conclusion about a plan for the number of people that will be using the building and the use for the rest of the land."

Some of the local residents were in favor of the Raytheon plan, however.

Donald Miller of Andover Street said "the current residents of the home have an antagonistic nature with the rest of the neighborhood and I thank Raytheon for making this presentation."

Due to the heavy case load, the board put off voting on the cases which they heard Monday. The next meeting will be on Monday March 30, at 7:30 p.m. at the Town Hall.

NEW RULES ON ESTIMATED TAX

Most of us are on a pay-as-you-go tax plan, with taxes taken out of our paychecks regularly. But for those with substantial other income -- whether from investments or from self-employment -- taxes due on income must be estimated in advance and paid quarterly.

Up to now, it was enough to pay 80 percent of taxes due on estimated tax (or 100 percent of what you paid last year, whichever is less). The actual tax would be figured in April and anything due included with you tax return. New rules call for 90 percent of actual tax liability to be paid during the year as estimated tax (or, again, 100 percent of last year's tax, in order to avoid paying penalties for underpayment.

For this year only, penalties will be waived if underpayment of estimated is caused by changes in the tax law that increased liabilities as of early 1986.

It's back to bloodlines for Pop Warner

by Rick Cooke

Wilmington Pop Warner is going straight back to its' bloodlines in an attempt to revive the program after an absence of three years.

Leo "Chico" Campbell, former standout Wildcat linebacker and a teammate of mine on the Lowell Sun All-Star team that wiped out Lowell High School 32-0 in 1973 (a cherished memory) is spearheading the comeback effort along with former Wilmington High School stars Jack Holloway, Dick Gillis, Ray Ventura and Selectman Jim Stewart.

The group has scheduled an organizational meeting for Thursday night, March 26 starting at 7:30 p.m. at the Town Hall. If enough interest is shown, a registration date will be scheduled.

The combination of the upsurge of soccer interest and lack of Pop Warner football numbers killed the Wilmington program three years ago. Two attempts to get it going again have failed, but this time the people who played Pop Warner as youngsters and then sprearheaded the glory years of WHS football are determined to make it work.

"We grew up in the Wilmington Pop Warner football system and we think it is important for the kids to have Pop Warner," offered Campbell, while also noting that several former Wilmington players now have youngters who are approaching Pop Warner age.

Back to the bloodlines

The Wilmington High School football squad will be depending upon the development of a Pop Warner system, as the depth chart is getting mighty thin.

"The lack of a Pop Warner program is starting to show up at the high school," noted Campbell. Coach Eddie Harrison's Wildcats went winless this past season, and as far as the depth chart goes, the high school cupboard is getting pretty bare in Wilmington.

Campbell and his group are shooting for 50 players to make up two teams. Wilmington has been reinstated in Pop Warner, the town has new uniforms in mothballs and the program is financially set according to Campbell.

Wilmington High School Director of Physical Education Jim Gillis has even given the go-ahead for the program to play its' home games on the high school field Sunday afternoons.

"We just want to get the parents and kids involved," said Campbell. Soccer is a good sport, but there should be a place for Pop Warner football in Wilmington."

The program has some quality people taking what could be the final shot at bringing Pop Warner back to Wilmington. The athletic director and high school coach are right there with support along with many people who grew up when Pop Warner was running on all eight cylinders in Wilmington.

If anyone can bring Wilmington Pop Warner back in style, it's Campbell and the several former Wildcats who are quality people and winners from the word go.

The future of Pop Warner football in Wilmington is in very capable hands.

Sox will bomb without Clemens

The Boston Red Sox had better face the fact that without Roger Clemens signed soon they are going nowhere in defense of their American League championship.

Sure, the market has changed when it comes to signing big money ballplayers. But one statistic says it all when it comes to Clemens' point of view. He was a 'stopper' in the true sense of the word a year ago, ending 14 Boston losing streaks.

When injuries plagued the pitching staff about midseason and Dennis Boyd was pulling his annual nutty, Roger was the one Boston pitching constant. Without Clemens the staff has no leader and must count too much on the return of Bob Stanley to the starting rotation. Ugh.

Providence-Indiana looks good

I like a Providence-Indiana NCAA finale, with Indiana emerging as the champion. I still think UNLV will self-destruct with all those three point heaves, Syracuse, with probably the best starting five in the tournament, will bow to cinderella Providence only because coach Rick Pitino and Billy Donovan have elevated that team to another level since the regular season ended. The NCAA Tournament is without question my favorite sporting event. Basketball at its' strategical best.

Harlem Magicians hit town Thursday

Wilmington becomes the basketball capital of the World Thursday night, March 26 at 7:30 when the Harlem Magicians visit Wilmington High School as part of their 1986-'87 World Tour.

Basketball afficianados in Wilmington will find out firsthand why the Magicians, headed by the inimitable Marques Haynes, are hailed as one of the finest entertainment groups in the world and why Mr. Haynes is acknowledged as the best individual entertainer and performer in the history of the quintet.

Those who have interviewed Haynes mark him down as one of the finest gentlemen they have come across in the world of sports. As player-coach and director of the Magicians, Haynes is fulfilling another era in his lifelong dream of spreading happiness throughout the universe by means of supplying entertaining basketball.

"We've got a team now similar to the original Globetrotters. We have players who take grat pride in what they do on the court. Without that pride, you can't make it. We also have performers who understand what basketball is all about. They know how to entertain and at the same time put on good basketball exhibitions. They have the 'know-how' as to how to put the two mediums together," Haynes reveals.

On the squad, joianing the veteran master is Valentino Willis, team captain and No. 1 comedian who fills the role the late Goose Tatum used to play with the original Globetrotter cast when Haynes was the star dribbler.

The Magicians have all the routines the old Trotters had and have added several new ones which Marques picked up along the way.

Paul Merrifield

Kelvin Nash

Marques Haynes

Marques Haynes, who has been playing basketball in six decades and still is going strong, has shown his wares all over the United States and in cities ranging in geographical location from the upper most part of Canada to the middle of Mexico.

During his long span of dribbling with different teams, Haynes has played in more than 12,000 games in 101 countries.

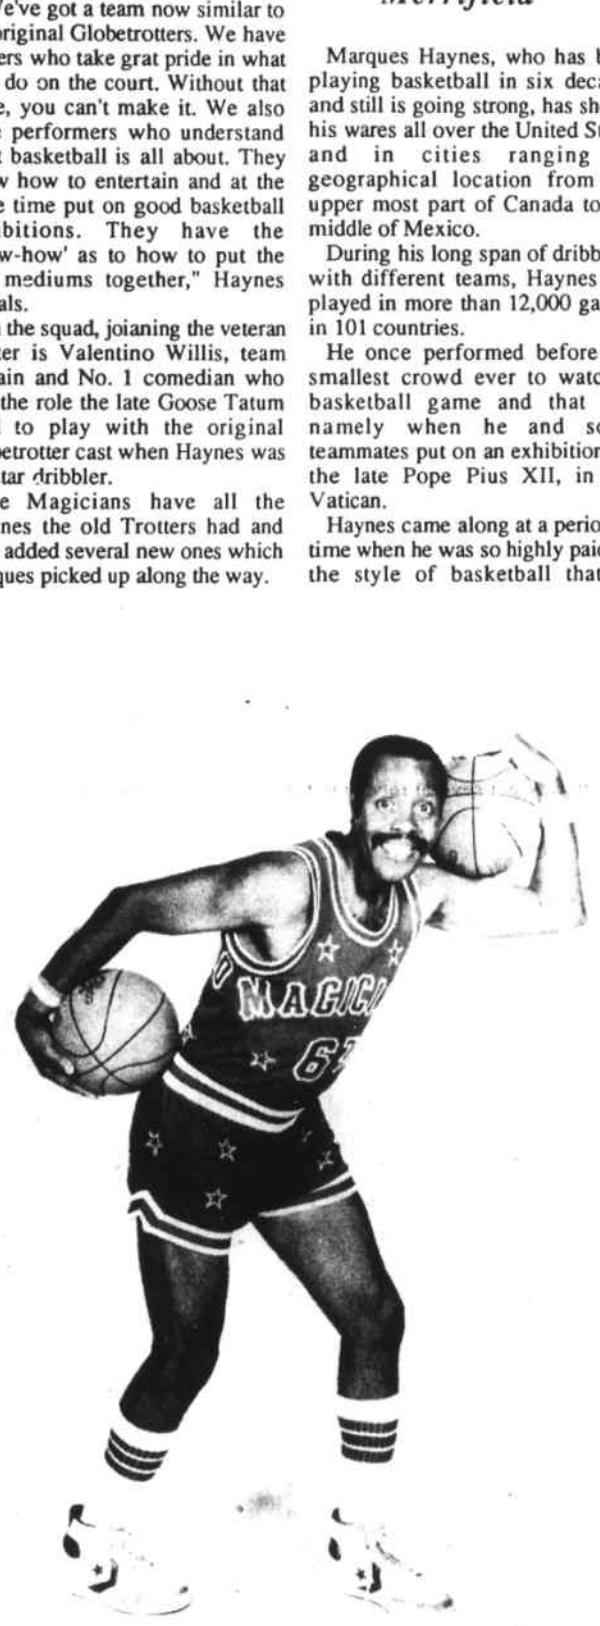

He once performed before the smallest crowd ever to watch a basketball game and that was namely when he and some teammates put on an exhibition for the late Pope Pius XII, in the Vatican.

Haynes came along at a period of time when he was so highly paid for the style of basketball that he played, that he turned down offers from such NBA top flight teams as the Minneapolis Lakers, Rochester Royals, perennial winners of National Basketball Association title and the Philadelphia Warriors, the first champions in the history of the Basketball Association of America.

The Magicians, in addition to featuring comedic basketball, will show fans in Wilmington an all-family variety spectacular at halftime, featuring the hilarious antics of Valentino Willis, as well as displaying several all-star performers in a show of smart, aggressive basketball.

The Magicians' Valentino Willis will be on hand to provide some comic relief Thursday night at Wilmington High School.

Nurses run April 5

April 5 marks the date of the fifth annual run for nurses co-sponsored by the Omni-Parker House and Nurse Mates. At noon, more than 500 nurses will unite at the Omni-Parker House to run 4.3 miles through downtown Boston to benefit the American Heart Association.

This event has been festive as well as profitable. The nurses have raised over $60,000 in their four year history. This much needed money helps the American Heart Association to provide for vital research, education and community services. For their fundraising efforts nurses will be receiving exciting prizes such as a weekend for two at the Omni-Parker House, a Nurse Mates gift pack and much more. Door prizes will also be awarded.

Put on your running shoes and join the nursing community in a demonstration of dedication to a healthy lifestyle. If you are a nurse and haven't been running lately, sponsor a runner and help nurses and the American Heart Association fight heart disease, the nation's number one killer.

For more information, please call the American Heart Association at 449-5931.

Outdoors column

by Bill Conlon

With a long, busy fishing season ahead, now's the time to beat the rush in getting the boat ready.

Actually, while it would tickle me pink to buy a new Ranger fishing boat, complete with a deluxe trailer, 50 horse Merc, built-in coolers and livewell and more electronics than the average B-52, there just ain't enough nickels rattling around my piggie bank. Looks like I'll just have to patch up "Old Green" and smile ... (sigh).

This year, however, things will be done correctly and on time, before the season begins. Starting with the registration.

Even though flat-bottomed "Old Green" is pushed along by an electric motor, she still needs to wear registration numbers. Simply put, a boat powered by anything other than oars or sails needs to be registered. Yes, that does include electric trolling motors.

Most boating or sporting-goods shops have mail-in registration forms. For standard small craft, a $20 registration fee will cover the vessel for two years. If caught by the Environmental Police (called game wardens by us old timers), the $20 registration fee will seem cheap.

Next order of business is getting the motor in shape. Gasoline power plants frequently need carburator overhauls and general cleaning, especially after a long winter in the cellar, and now's the time.

Even electric motors need some maintainance. In my case, the battery cables are frazzled, which wastes power and creates a serious overheating problem with the clips. A few minutes with a soldering iron will set things aright.

As for the hull itself, "Old Green" still has a few leaks following an unfortunate double-gainer off the roof rack last spring. I've found that silicon sealant in a tube -- the stuff that smells like ammonia when it dries -- works like a champ.

Speaking of the boat rack, that is another piece of boating gear that could use a quick look. For those with trailers, don't forget to check the wiring, tires and cables.

Another thing to line up before the season starts is the list of needed accessories. Things like battery-powered lanterns, boat cushions and fire extinguishers are both required by law, and often neglected until the fishing starts. Far better is it to lay these things aside now than to scramble for a last minute flashlight while the fish are biting at the pond.

Other dainties such as stringers, coolers and 55-gallon drums of bug spray are also best looked into now.

Open-water fishing is about to begin in earnest. And while fishing from the shore is both effective and fun, I'd much rather have "Old Green" ready to shove off at a moment's notice.

With a little planning and labor -- she'll be ready for another season's work in no time.

--Tackle Box --

The ice is almost gone, as a stroll near any pond will quickly reveal. While there may be a thick layer in the middle of the lake, the ice around the edges is already gone. In other words -- STAY OFF THE ICE!

Most of the rivers and streams in the area have cleared. The Division of Fisheries & Wildlife is currently conducting a big spring stocking program, with some 630,000 trout slated to be dumped into Bay State waters. The pursuit of trout right now may be worth a pair of muddy boots, but watch out for the high spring runoff waters.

Turkey permits have been mailed out. Those wishing to take part in one of the two spring seasons for wild turkey must return their permit applications (the buff colored cards -- it's too late for the green "license" cards) with the required amount before the actual permit will be mailed back.

Incidently, the state is considering a plan to stock wild turkeys in the eastern half of Massachusetts. Hunting zones for the huge birds are currently limited to the far side of the Connecticut River, but there may someday be enough turkeys nearby to allow local hunting.

Prayer To The Holy Spirit

Oh Holy Spirit, thou who are all knowing, who brightens every path that I may reach my idea, thou who giveth me this divine gift of forgiving and forgetting wrongs done unto me and who in every instant of my life art with me. I'd like in this short dialogue to affirm my gratitude for all your blessings and reaffirm once again that I never want to part from thee though the illusion of material things abound.

My desire is to be with thee and all my loved ones in perpetual grace. Thank you for your mercy on me and mine. (Person should pray 3 consecutive days without revealing petition. Within three days grace will be attained regardless of how difficult the petition may be.)

Publish this prayer, once grace attained.

Grateful for Grace attained.

D.B.

ST. JUDE'S NOVENA

May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be adored, glorified, loved and praised throughout the world now and forever.

Sacred Heart of Jesus, pray for us. St. Jude, worker of miracles, pray for us. St. Jude helper of the hopeless pray for us.

Say this prayer 9 times a day by the 8th day your prayer will be answered.

It has never been known to fail.

Publication must be promised.

My prayers have been answered.

Tech releases basic skills scores

Shawsheen Tech Superintendent-Director Charles Lyons announced the result of the state's basic skills test administered last October to 9th grade students entering the Shawsheen Valley Regional Vocational Technical School District.

"The results are a measure of kindergarten through eighth grade school learning," stated Lyons "and do not reflect the value of educational opportunities offered by our high school district."

The results of the testing, presented this week to the Shawsheen Valley Regional Vocational School Committee, revealed scoring as follows:

| Tentative passing scores: | 60 | 70 | 80 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Reading | 81 | 72 | 57 (Percentage |
| Math | 73 | 64 | 48 passing) |

In writing, where a "pass-fail" system of scoring was employed by the state, no state-wide passing percentages were reported because of the large number of writing topics administered at each grade level. However, for the various writing topics, 86 percent of Shawsheen Tech entering freshmen submitted a score of 70 percent or better.

Lyons continued "Out of 370 entering freshmen who took the test, school records indicate 113 or 30.5 percent have special education plans. Mistakingly, sub-group scores for Shawsheen Tech are inaccurate, since 41 ninth grade students with special education plans were lumped together with regular students. It's obvious that vocational-technical schools serve a much higher level of non-college bound and special education students than non-vocational schools."

Statewide, 20.08 percent of vocational school students in grade nine were receiving special education service (30.5 percent for Shawsheen Tech) compared to 10.59 percent of grade nine students in all Massachusetts schools. Female students did better than male students, especially in reading. In our school, the percentages for 70 or better were: females, 80 percent and males 70 percent in reading.

In general, vocational school results were approximately 10 percentage points lower than state results against the arbitrary score of 70. Again, scores show only the results of K-8 education prior to learning in vocational schools. With the potential for learning more basic skills in an occupational context, students electing vocational schools appear to be very ready to continue their learning. This becomes especially obvious if one analyzes results with an arbitrary score of 60 and removes the high special education population from the vocational figures:

Percentage achieving a score of 60 or better:

Reading, Regional vocational school regular students, 85 percent, math, 84 percentage; all students in the state, reading 86 percent, math, 84 percent.

The results for individual students will be mailed shortly to parents, and will be used by Shawsheen professionals to ensure mastery of basic skills. We expect significant growth by these students over the next three years as a result of curriculum modification and remedial learning programs committed to quality basic skills instruction.

Lyons concluded "It should be noted that the basic skill tests measure only academic skills, and do not reflect occupational competencies. Our 96 percentage placement statistics for Shawsheen Tech graduates demonstrates the potency of a vocational-technical education."

Save TV's Spenser campaign

The Massachusetts Film Bureau recently began a public support campaign to encourage ABC Entertainment to renew its private-eye tv series "Spenser For Hire," starring Robert Urich, for a third season. The campaign slogan, "Give "Spenser' A Fair Shake," reflects the bureau's contention that, despite ABC's support, the show is far more popular than its ratings reflect.

According to Massachusetts Film Bureau Director Mary Lou Crane, the series has not really had a "fair shake" at building a large national audience because of frequent rescheduling. Critics were nearly unanimous in their praise of "Spenser: For Hire" when it premiered in September of 1985, but the series has occupied three different day and time slots since its debut. Frequent rescheduling makes it difficult for any show to build an audience, and this season "Spenser" has been broadcast on a very difficult night for ABC, Saturday at 10

"Because "Spenser: For Hire' means a great deal to the people of our state both in terms of economic well-being and as a source of pride, we are very grateful for ABC's confidence in the series over the past two years," said Ms. Crane. "In return, we'd now like to demonstrate to them just how socially important and popular their series is around the country. It's something we can do to let the studio and network know how much we appreciate the support and confidence they've already shown us," she added.

Aiding the Massachusetts Film Bureau in its letter-writing campaign is Boston radio station WRKO (68 AM). The station's popular "Ted and Janet" morning drivetime talk show, hosted by Ted O'Brien and Janet Jeghelian, has agreed to play a leading role in generating support by asking their listeners to write ABC Entertainment. Ted and Janet will also be challenging their counterparts at radio stations in other cities around the country to generate mail in support of the series.

SURF'S UP!

And in still-wintry New England, this means hitting a beach flayed by snow and icy gusts

'The great thing is, it's never the same. You just can't count on going surfing. Half the fun is looking for that day, looking for that wind. . . .'
– Eric Norgaard

By Ellen Steese
Staff writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Hampton Beach, N.H.

It's a gray, dismal afternoon in March. A few snowflakes spin through the air as the waves crash off Hampton Beach. A terrible day for surfing – except in New England.

"The surfing is much better in the winter because the northeast storms bring the waves – up to 10 or 12 feet. It's the only time when it's consistent," says Eric Norgaard, a sunny, easygoing guy who drives past the beach on his way to work and stops in for some runs when the waves are good. "Most people think I'm crazy, but there are a lot of guys who surf," he says."If there are big waves, you'll find 40 to 50 surfers here."

Unfortunately, the waves aren't in the 10-foot league on this particular day; they're more like a miserly four feet. For one thing, the wind isn't right.

"When it comes from the east it's OK," says fellow surfer Jeff Jones. "When it comes from the west, it makes 'em mushy. It's coming from the north today."

Mr. Norgaard says that people go out on mediocre days like this one to practice up for the days when the waves are better and scarier.

"I've seen waves . . . that when one guy fell he bounced twice before he got to the bottom. It feels like being in a washing machine with baseball bats – I've heard it described that way. Especially when you're going round and round with your board.

"The great thing is, it's never the same. You just can't count on going surfing. Half the fun is looking for that day, looking for that wind. . . ."

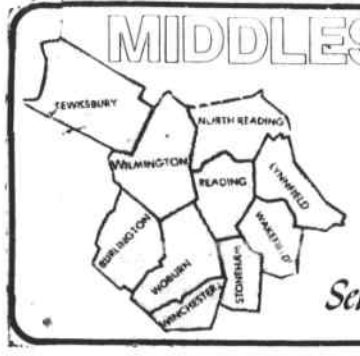

The thing that makes winter surfing here bearable is technology. The one-piece wetsuits that actually keep you dry – called "steamers," according to Norgaard – weren't available until about four years ago. "They used to wear the two piece suits with the beaver tail; you freeze to death," he says.

Community Concerts membership drive

The Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra's appearance will be the outstanding feature of the four concert series for the 1987-88 season sponsored by the Greater Stoneham Community Concerts Association, a volunteer civic organization serving the North Suburban area for more than 40 years.

Linda Maxey, virtuoso marimbist, the Robert DeCormier Singers, and the Aurora Trio (bassoon, flute and harp) will round out the season's offerings. All the concerts are held at the Stoneham High School, 149 Franklin Street, one half mile from Stoneham Square.

The yearly membership drive will be held beginning April 6 to April 11. The headquarters will be at the Stoneham Public Library. Hours will be Monday through Friday, 1 to 5 p.m. and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

No tickets to individual concerts are ever sold at the door. Admittance is by membership card only. Interested people may come into the library headquarters for further information and to purchase memberships available to adults, students and family, or they may call Mrs. Robert Leavitt, Membership Chairman at 944-5262 or 438-1855, write to Box 275, Reading, MA. 01867, or purchase membership at the door of the final concert this spring on April 8. Please do not call the Stoneham Library. Call local representatives: Mrs. John Cronin, 944-2913; Mrs. Ernest Hall, 935-0889 or Mrs. Donald Hanson, 438-0701.

Patrons who obtain memberships by the April 8 concert, New York Sextet with Edmond Karlsrud at 8:15 p.m., are entitled to view this extra concert as a bonus for signing up for the concert series, instead of staying home with the TV and Cosby. The Sextet will present a program of favorite vocal music, Broadway show tunes, both dramatic and comical musical scenes. Mr. Karlsrud is well-known internationally, a base-baritone with vast recitalist experience.

The well-known advantages of community concert membership always includes free parking, and admittance by membership card to many reciprocal concerts arranged by other Community Concert Associations. The closest to this north suburban area is Salem. On hold before Salem's membership drive are the Alexandria Quintet (flute, harp, violin, cello and viola), the New Christy Minstrels and pianist Walt Steiger. Their fourth concert will be announced later.

The Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra, composed of 100 talented young musicians from 75 Massachusetts communities, 8 to 18 years of age, has made international tours since 1969, has performed in many schools and communities throughout New England, and in major halls in the Boston area, Carnegie Hall, the White House, and the Kennedy Center. Their repertoire includes the 7th and 9th Symphonies by Beethoven, The Firebird and Rite of Spring, by Stravinsky, and The Planets by Gustav Holst, and many other works from standard adult orchestral repertoire. Audiences everywhere have enjoyed this refreshing group of teenaged players who make up in determination and dedication for whatever they may lack in mature proficiency and elegance.

Linda Maxey occupies a unique position in the music world as one of only a handful of concert marimba virtuosos. She plays traditional music for the marimba, since audiences seem to want that, but also some contemporary pieces such as Paul Harvey's "Two Etudes on the Themes of Gershwin." She chooses works written for solo instrument and the piano (often the other instrument is the violin) and arranges them for the marimba. From the Current-Argus, Nebraska, the critic wrote, "Maxey is a skilled and talented musician with a commanding presence at her instrument. She does things on a marimba one would not imagine possible."

All the musicians of the Aurora Trio, harpist, bassoonist and flutist, were trained at Julliard School of Music, have performed with numerous orchestras in a solo role and are contest winners. Their programs include arrangements of George Gershwin, a 13th century dance from the Court of Richard the Lionhearted, and a folk song suite based on folk songs from the British Isles, which includes Greensleeves, Blow the Man Down, and a comic version of The Drunken Sailor. Each artist presents a solo, and talks about their instrument, the particular problems of touring with them, and some background on the music and the composer.

The fourth concert will be the DeCormier Singers. They have toured the U.S. and Canada for 25 years to the acclaim of critics. They will present their program — "An American Salute - A Tribute to Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness." They will bring their distinctive blend of sound and movement to the folk music of native Americans, and the settlers, immigrants from many countries, and from the slave ships from Africa. They bring their skillful interpretation of American folk songs, born in many lands, hoping that their audiences, like Walt Whitman, may "Hear America Singing."

SALUTE TO SPRING

Winter snows are melting fast
Buds will soon be seen
Then 'Hooray, it's spring at last'
The lawns are turning green.

And so the crocuses push through
The soft brown thawed-out earth
And waters in the rivers
Are running for all they're worth.

So, break out that Easter bonnet
And join the spring parade
Enjoy the world, and all that's in it
That's why God had it made.

Wakefield residents get together

Clean up other people's trash

By JIM ROUILLARD

Armed only with rakes, shovels, bare hands and a heady enthusiasm — and keeping a weather eye to broken wine bottles and the safety of woodchucks — a small band of Wakefield residents this year decided to celebrate spring, once again, by cleaning up someone else's act.

In New England, of course, some things are eternal because they seem to be — and some because they have to be.

In the former category, there is the throbbing wait for the pussywillow's first puff or for the initial gladdening glimpse of robin or redwing among those clots of nasties, the grackles — like scarlet threads among the iridescence.

The hope for spring — and the perennial attraction of trash to open land — must be classed in the latter group.

The tiny but intent coalition of Wakefield residents — which includes a range of people from professional soprano to weekend spelunker — fueled by faith, victory and an adequacy of trash bags, decided to observe the passing of this year's vernal equinox by tidying up some land which doesn't even belong to them.

Spring is tradition's time for new brooms, after all, and the Bennett Street neighbors planned to do some clean-sweeping and coincident celebrating.

The planned spring fete was in anticipation of the approaching anniversary of a year-old triumph.

Last April the neighborhood group accomplished what many said could not be done: they halted, at least temporarily, development of an acre and a half of Bennett Street land for construction of a third condominium complex in an area zoned for general residence.

The group's combined efforts — by the way — also helped bring about a two-year moratorium on new construction of multi-family dwellings in Wakefield.

First blood in the fight, then, went to the residents — though some fear the battle may only just be joined and not yet over.

Some form of development of the land — which tops one of Wakefield's highest spots (on a clear day you can see Bear Hill) — seems assured, according to resident Lorraine Woods-Barrett.

But while town, residents and poised developer wait for the drawing-up of a new master zoning plan, the Bennett Street friends and neighbors — a wonderfully diverse group including candy-striper and nurse, dishwasher, mechanical engineer and elevator constructor, English teacher, respiratory therapist and animal rights activist, hairdresser, housewife and various self-employed children — are happy to enjoy their sight of

Cleaning to S-12

GUNG-HO WAKEFIELD RESIDENTS, though eager, ready and willing, were weather-stymied last weekend in their hopes to observe spring's advent by sprucing up land that doesn't even belong to them. Jerry Woods, left, Lorraine Woods-Barrett and Doug Bridge hope for better weather on Bennett Street this weekend to observe and celebrate year-old victory.

Spenser

The Massachusetts Film Bureau, the state's office responsible for attracting motion picture and tv production, has worked in cooperation with "Spenser" since 1984 when the series was no more than one draft script on Warner Bros.' wishlist. According to Ms. Crane, "We knew early in the development of the show that it would be of importance nationally in that it addresses current social issues in a constructive manner based on the works of a contemporary Boston author, Robert B. Parker. For us at the film bureau the show was the opportunity we had been working toward since 1982 when Boston became the setting for "Cheers."

As of the present tv season Boston is the setting for four network shows: NBC's "Cheers" and "St. Elsewhere," CBS's "The Cavanaugh's," and ABC's "Spenser: For Hire." Other than "Spenser," which shoots entirely on- location in Massachusetts, the other series are shot in-studio in the Los Angeles area.

Nonetheless, Massachusetts receives a tremendous amount of national exposure with its popularity as a setting for both tv series and feature films, which state officials identify as a significant contributor to the commonwealth's 30 percent growth in tourism over the past three years.

In terms of revenues, tv and film production in Massachusetts last year generated $150 million in economic benefit; nearly $50 million of which was derived from "Spenser: For Hire" alone.

Viewers wanting to take part in the campaign to "Give "Spenser' A Fair Shake" are being asked to write "Spenser" c/o "Ted and Janet," WRKO-68 AM, 3 Fenway Plaza, Boston, Ma. 02215.

SURF Continued from S-1

for eight years, says his suit cost him $400. "When the water is about 28 degrees, it helps a lot. On a nice sunny Saturday I can last all day long. There are those days when it's five below, 10 below zero, when you can only last two hours maybe."

On this day, it's about 28 degrees F. Tiny snowflakes fall and disappear on the polished flat black stones of the beach. ("When it gets so you can barely see the beach, it's fun," says Norgaard.) There's old snow on the concrete retaining wall, and, across the road, more snow on the roofs of the small, close-set white houses. Two joggers trot by; they would have seemed like diehards yesterday, but now they seem reasonably snug and toasty in their bright jogging suits.

"I'm not a good surfer, I just like it," says Norgaard, putting on his hood and gloves. He says that, at 27, he is old for a surfer, though there is a "hard core" of older surfers. Everybody today seems to be about 17 – "this is the after-school crowd," he explains.

He stretches, picks up his short white board with its small, fuschia-tinged fins, and tromps off into the surf.

Once everybody's out on the water it's hard to tell who's who. Somebody spots a wave and starts paddling toward it; he's up for an instant, and then he's down, his board sinking slantwise, slowly disappearing behind a wave. Somebody else gets a good long ride of a few seconds or so, white water spraying wildly about the knees.

Every so often people emerge, with scarlet ears and noses, water streaming off their sleek black suits, and assure you that it's really warmer in the water than it is on the beach.

Dave Cropper and Drew Clark, two red-headed teenagers, agree that it takes a lot of commitment to be a winter surfer in New England.

"The first day I really hated it, because I got pounded," says Mr. Cropper. "But I just kept with it. When I started there were hardly any people. But now there are two surf shops and a lot of people who do it – or think they do it."

"The cultivated surfer look," says Mr. Clark.

Cropper says all sorts of people surf here: "from doctors to lawyers to students."

We get into a brief discussion of common surfing expressions: a "floater," which is going into the white water, and across, and then back into the wave; a "cut back," which is a 90 degree change of direction; and "off the lips," which is when you go off the top of the wave. "And of course, what every surfer looks for is that tube ride," he says, referring to that classic surfing ride right under the curl of the wave.

"Usually you surf after a storm; the next morning people get out. Surfing in the sunrise when the sun comes up – that's called 'dawn patrols,' " Cropper points out.

After a while, they go back in the water. And a little bit later, several surfers who don't happen to be surfing on this particular day stop by at the beach just to check out the action. One is Duffy McCarthy, who says that he's just returned from surfing in Puerto Rico: A friend picked him up at the airport and they drove straight to a surf break – "stopped by my house to pick up a wet suit." He says you forget how cold it is here.

"Duffy has surfed with seals," somebody says.

"The seal popped out and rode the waves – it was insane," he says, laughing. "We were pretty impressed. The kid can surf. Must have been a California seal."

The conversation wends one way and another and then turns to the weather: a different topic for surfers than it is for most people.

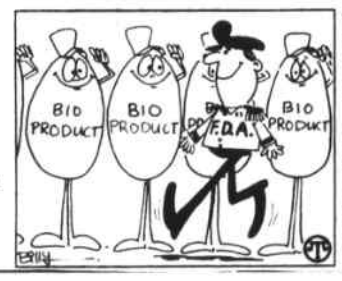

"We're all experts on the weather channel; surfers are the only people who wish for bad weather," says Jack Keefe, who looks a bit older than the others and is wearing a herringbone coat.

Mr. Keefe says that surfers here are pretty friendly, pretty accepting of newcomers, and they look out for each other. "Most places you go to, you're shunned," he says. "We get guys here from Florida and Hawaii, we put 'em up, we feed 'em."

About this point the sun comes out and the water goes from gritty gray to a clean glassy blue tinged with pink. Then after a bit the sun is gone for good, and people begin clearing out. The beach is empty, and wetsuits lie like puddles on the ground on either side of a pickup.

It hasn't been the greatest day's surfing, though Eric Norgaard says these things appear different in retrospect. He says the most common surfing expression is not "off the lips" or "cut back" but " 'You should have been here yesterday' – that's what everybody always says," he explains. "Tomorrow they'll have been tubed today; that's the way it is."

Many biotechnology products for disease therapy are now being reviewed by the FDA.

If You're Concerned, We're Concerned

Individuals who may have received a blood transfusion between 1977 and 1985 (before the AIDS screening test became available) may be concerned about possible exposure to the AIDS virus.

Since last week's media coverage of the possible exposure to AIDS by a minute number of blood donors, all hospitals in the area have been receiving calls from concerned patients.

To relieve the anxieties of our patients, the Winchester Hospital Laboratory Department has reserved Extension 3270 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. to respond to these calls.

Trivia

According to the EPA's latest estimates, under the Superfund program's current funding levels of approximately $1 billion a year, it could take up to 23 years to clean up the nation's 2,500 most hazardous toxic waste dump sites, reports International Wildlife magazine.

The prevailing attitude in the "Show Me" state of Missouri seems to be, "Show me a good cause, and I'll willingly pay more taxes," says National Wildlife magazine. In both 1976 and 1984, as other tax-raising measures were defeated, the citizens of Missouri approved increases in the state sales tax to fund conservation programs. So far, no other state has followed suit.

Over 300 retirees enjoy Red Sox '75 highlight film

Over 300 retired men enjoyed a nostalgia trip as they watched a movie of the 1975 World Series at the March 11 meeting of the Retired Men's Club of Wakefield. The next meeting promises to be a real winner when the speaker will be the renowned harbormaster at Haverhill, speaker and entertainer Captain William J. "Red" Slavid. "Red" is very much in demand as a speaker and the club is fortunate to have him with us. This is a meeting no one will want to miss.

During the business part of the meeting, 18 birthdays were recognized. The following visitors were introduced: Robert Stinson and Walter Geddry, both of Stoneham, Roderick MacNeil of Reading and Kenneth C. Newman of Wakefield. Five new members were welcomed into the club: Albert W. Holland of Stoneham and Jim Worthley, Alfred Goscinak, Joseph C. Stanton and Frank Johnson, all of Wakefield. Silent tribute was paid to two members who recently passed away: Robert Taylor (1923-1987) and Harry Goodwin (1893-1987).

Door prizes were won by Henry Russell and Barney Digmann. The Safety Committee announces they have arranged to have two men check the entrances on meeting days for ice and other hazards. The Camera Club also met recently. Charlie Post gave a slide presentation "Deep South USA when we were young." The club is starting new practice of awarding a door prize at each meeting. The prize will be a roll of Kodachrome color slide film. Andy McHugh gave the high bowling scores for the week. They meet twice a week at the Wakefield Bowladrome. The Stamp Club met recently at the Wakefield Library. The Travel Club met and the topic was "Mexico." The club has many trips planned for the summer months. The band will begin making appearances on an accelerated schedule now that warm weather is approaching. They will be playing for the full membership of the club at the May 27 meeting. This is always a popular program for the club; mark it on your calendar now.

The club meets on the second and fourth Wednesdays of each month at the First Parish Congregational Church in Wakefield. Coffee and doughnuts are served from 9 to 9:30 a.m., and the meeting begins promptly at 9:30. All retired men in the Wakefield vicinity are invited.

Should radar detectors be legal in your car?

The good news is that two states and the District of Columbia are considering legislation this year to make radar detectors legal, or at least lessen the penalties for using one of the devices.

The bad news, though, is that four legislatures — in Maryland, Massachusetts, New York and West Virginia — are taking up five bills outlawing even the mere possession of radar detectors. And lawmakers in New Jersey, New York and Tennessee have introduced bills to prohibit truckers from employing radar detectors.

As has been the case for several years, the radar detector — nothing but a small radio receiver — is once again at the center of a big controversy, reports Janice Lee, President of the Radio Association Defending Airwave Rights, Inc. (RADAR). The organization is the watchdog group for the radar detector industry.

On one side of the debate are those who see radar detectors as an aid in disobeying the speed limit and a threat to the rest of the motoring public. On the other side are the more than 6 million drivers who know radar detectors are useful tools for promoting highway safety. The devices make drivers more aware of their speed and can help motorists protect themselves against unfair speeding citations.

With all of the legislative activity surrounding radar detectors, RADAR believes it's important that radar detector owners and dealers take an active role in ensuring their states permit the use of detectors.

At the other end of the spectrum are Maryland HB450 and SB158, Massachusetts HB3642, New York Assembly Bill 2099 and SB1257, and West Virginia HB2496, all outright attempts to ban radar detectors. Since may factors such as poor maintenance, larger trucks, smaller cars and driver fatigue as well as speeding play a role in heavy truck accidents, some legislators see banning radar detectors in commercial vehicles as the solution to truck safety. Such bills include New Jersey SB2741, New York SB431, and Tennessee HB315 and SB422.

Indeed, a ban on radar detectors would not get at the root of highway safety problems. Campaigns against drunk driving, the promotion of seat belts, improved automobile design, and stronger truck safety inspection are the real solutions to the problem of traffic accidents. In 1984, alcohol was involved in 54 percent of all driver fatalities. In 76 percent of passenger car fatalities, safety restraints were not used. Focusing on the 3 percent of drivers who own radar detectors fails to address the true threats to road safety.

The best way to keep up with legislation pending in your state and others is through an associate membership in RADAR. For $15, members receive the booklet "Strategy for Dealing with a Radar-Backed Speeding Citation," a discount on the video "Radar on Trial," access to a legal referral service and periodic information on legislation, studies, court decisions and regulatory agency activities that could affect radar detector owners.

To join RADAR, or for more information about the association or pending legislation, write to: 4949 S. 25A, Tipp City, Ohio 45371. Or call (513) 667-5472.

ON YOUR FEET
BUNIONS

Bunions are a common deformity of the Big Toe and the joint at the base of the big toe. The deformity is primarily caused by inherited bone structure and can be aggravated by shoe gear.

The problems associated with bunion deformities are usually a painful "bump" or enlargement on the inside of the foot at the base of the big toe and a deviated or crooked Big Toe that pushes against or under the second toe.

Correction of the deformity ranges from removal of the bump and realignment of the big toe to more sophisticated procedures utilizing stainless steel screws.

Following a thorough examination, we will discuss our findings and treatment modalities.

All these procedures are performed in the office operating room under safe local anesthesia. Advances in operating techniques provide selection of the best procedure(s) and minimal post-operative discomfort.

'Intake ' program underway for youths

Intake is underway for the Summer Youth Employment Program (SYEP), which provides summer job opportunities for eligible, 14 to 21 year olds.

The program is funded under the federal Job Training Partnership Act and is administered by Employment Resources Inc. (ERI) in 20 communities including Woburn, Wilmington, North Reading, Reading, Stoneham and Burlington.

Eligibility is based on low income guidelines.

Applications are available at locations including high school guidance offices and public libraries (main branch). Included with the applications are instructions and a schedule of dates and locations, throughout the 20 community area, where they may be returned.

The program offers 25 to 35 hours of work experience per week, for eight weeks, beginning July 6. Work sites include non-profit organizations and municipal departments and job opportunities are available in such areas as clerical, daycare, maintenance, recreation, carpentry, arts and groundskeeping.

According to SYEP manager, Nancy Hinkley, the goal of the program is to provide valuable experience and job skills that will enhance the participants' opportunities for success in future employment. In addition to a specified work site supervisor, each participant will be assigned to a SYEP counselor for additional guidance and support. Labor market orientation workshops will also be provided to first-time participants.

For more information, please call Employment Resources Inc. in Cambridge at 494-1154.

At age 55, driving skills may deteriorate

By the year 2,000 one of every three drivers in America will be over 55 years of age. These people want — and should be able — to continue to drive safely.

AAA is convinced that age should never be the sole criterion of driving ability. However, there is convincing evidence that the skills necessary for safe driving begin to deteriorate at age 55 or thereabouts.

To discover ways to help older drivers keep their safe driving records to pinpoint areas of potential deterioration in older drivers, the AAA National Foundation for Traffic Safety funded a research program and published its results. Its head, Professor James L. Malfetti of Columbia University, is one of the country's leading authorities on driving safety. Professor Malfetti worked closely with older persons in developing ways to help them drive as long as possible with consideration for their own and others' safety on the highways.

The result of Dr. Malfetti's pioneering research and field testing is a unique 15-question rating form that for the first time anywhere provides guidance for older drivers who wish to assess their driving skills. This self-scoring test is designed to help older drivers by targeting deficiencies and giving specific suggestions on how to compensate for them. It is easy to use and highly informative for older and younger drivers alike.

"I'm with the AIDS Action Committee"

The other afternoon, on my way to a restaurant on Boylston Street to meet a friend for lunch, I was stopped by a young, rather clean-cut fellow who could have easily been a student at one of the universities in the area. He held a stack of pamphlets in one hand, and when he was sure he had my attention he handed one of them to me.

Normally, I have the urge to walk past these people who try to hand you paper along busy city streets, most of the time they are proliferating causes I have little or no interest in, and too often they are begging for money, which turns me off even more. But this young guy caught me off guard, and I stopped.

As I glanced over the pamphlet he handed to me, he said, "I'm with the AIDS Action Committee of Massachusetts, and I'd like you to have this pamphlet on how to enjoy safer sex."

I had the impulse to tell him to mind his own business, that I'll conduct my personal life as I see fit, but then something struck me: I was shocked by what I was reading in the pamphlet, and I couldn't believe this clean-cut kid was arbitrarily passing them out to passers-by on Boylston Street. The pamphlet was entitled "Safer Sex Can Be Sensuous." Inside it described what one should be doing — and more appropriately not doing — to prevent the spread of the deadly disease, AIDS.

"I can appreciate what you and your group are trying to do," I told him, "but don't you think this kind of literature is going a bit too far?"

He responded, "No, we don't. We believe it's necessary to be very frank in telling people what AIDS is all about and how to prevent the spread of it."

The pamphlet contained wording that seemed too explicit, and I told him I thought there was a better way of phrasing the information. I also said that it appeared the pamphlet was actually designed to turn more people on to casual sex than off from it. By this time he was ready to push me on so that he could stop the next person who came along. I gladly went on my way, tucking the pamphlet into my back pocket. The pamphlet deserved to be thrown away, as far as I was concerned, but I wanted time to think more about what this AIDS committee was trying to accomplish.

I showed the pamphlet to my friend, who was also male, and he agreed the information was good but it was presented in a too vulgar way to be disseminated to the general public. This response prompted me to contact other members of the committee to find out more about their goals.

I spoke on the phone to another member, and he pretty much reiterated what the young fellow on Boylston Street had said. Except he made a comment that frightened me. He said he'd like to see these pamphlets distributed to junior high school and high school youths.

"It'll never happen," I stated emphatically.

"We disagree with that attitude," the fellow on the phone said. "But because the literature is primarily geared toward the gay community, we feel it is being rejected by the powers to be in the school department. So in the meantime, we are passing the information around in other ways."

I told him that if I were the father of a high school boy or girl, and he or she came home with one of those pamphlets, I'd either go to the school and blacken the principal's eye, or I'd go to the street corner where the pamphlet was passed out and decapitate the guy who handed it out.

"That kind of attitude is why we have the AIDS problem in the first place," he told me.

No, I said, I have absolutely nothing to do with the AIDS problem, and if I were a parent, I'd handle the dissemination of educational information as I saw fit. I would not, I told him, allow him or his pamphlet to be the conduit by which the information was spread. I would also oppose any move by a school department to use that kind of pamphlet to inform young people about ways to prevent the spread of AIDS. That kind of pamphlet, as far as I was concerned, is designed to arouse, not make aware.

I was curious to find out how high school-aged kids feel about the problem of AIDS, so I journeyed over to a local high school and approached a few of them to ask them. I was surprised to learn that nearly every one to whom I spoke had little or no real information about the problem of AIDS, which made me think more education is needed, however, not in the form to which I had been exposed.

A typical response was this one made by a sixteen year old junior boy: "Most of the guys I hang around with never think about catching AIDS. That's something other people catch. I don't know anybody with it, but if I did, I'd probably want to stay far away from him, even though I'm told that it can't be caught that easily."

A seventeen year old girl who is about to graduate this spring said, "I can only speak for myself, but I don't think anybody my age really worries about catching AIDS, even though I hear girls are as likely to get it as boys. Most of the girls I know who do get involved, you know, don't really think about diseases, period. They just do what they want to. I think drugs and alcohol have a lot to do with it. The ones who get involved with drugs and drinking tend to be a little less careful about that sort of thing. Personally, I just want to stay with one boy."

That kind of attitude is very prevalent, I was told by a school official who wished to remain anonymous. "They don't really understand the disease," he said, "but they are smarter than we think. They know enough to stay with one partner, if they're smart, that is. The ones who are promiscuous are the ones who run the danger of exposing themselves as they get on with their lives."

This school official noted that, in all honesty, his school department has all it can do just handling the large number of teen-age girls who become pregnant out of wedlock. "It's gotten to the point where we have to be careful about these girls walking up and down stairs, carrying too many books, and getting involved in activities that might harm their babies," he said. "This sort of problem has to take precedence because, as far as the school is concerned, it is here and we have to contend with it. The issue of AIDS, as far as the school is concerned, is still out there somewhere, in another world, somebody else's problem. It is sad to admit, but it is true. We can try to educate, but we are also walking a delicate balance. And furthermore, who the heck has the budget these days to spend thousands of dollars informing kids about AIDS?"

It was his last statement that jolted me, because if school departments don't have the money to launch their own educational programs against AIDS, then the next logical step is to open the doors to pamphlets like the one I was handed. The educational information is there, as I've said, but it is presented in a way that is both shocking and distasteful.

I left the school yard feeling that the situation is developing into a major enigma: the need for education is there, but how do we create the proper conduit through which the information can be spread? Parents are kidding themselves if they think ads like the ones appearing in popular magazines showing, say, a young teen-age girl with a smile on her face and a caption reading something like "I just had safe sex...." are going to make the problem go away. It's just as that seventeen year old girl told me: kids don't stop to think about whether they are having safe sex or unsafe sex. If they are going to have it, they are going to have it. The responsibility of informing them about the facts of life have always ultimately rested on parents first, and the situation now is no different.

I happened to arrive home late from work a few times recently, and upon switching on the TV I was hit with that late night ad showing the U.S. Surgeon General promoting the use of a condom to help prevent the spread of AIDS. The ad is the softened result of a hot controversy between broadcasters who feel it is necessary to carry condom ads and civic groups that don't want so much as the word mentioned in public. I think the ad is helpful, but again, it is too insignificant to have major impact on the problem. Perhaps a more intense media blitz, like the one proposed by some broadcasters, would eventually do the trick.

Throughout all this raging controversy, the clergy has remained conspicuously quiet. The Catholic church is sticking to the laws regarding sex as handed down by the Vatican council, while other church groups have found the issue of AIDS to be moot. The activity of a few of these groups has been ridiculous in some cases. Take the minister who stepped off the pulpit to pass out condoms to his congregation. Didn't this minister realize he was handing them out to the wrong people? The members of his congregation are not likely to be the folks who hang out at the gay bars and discos on Saturday night. He would have gotten his message across better if he'd gone down to the nearest red-light district and passed them out to the people who hang out there. He wanted to get some publicity on the need for safer sex, but unfortunately, because he went about it the wrong way, the publicity turned out to be laughable.

The bottom line appears to be within each of us. Perhaps we need to re-examine our priorities. The baby boomers who got the sexual freedom ball rolling in the late sixties may need to put a halt to the roll by proselytizing their children over to a new way of thinking, a way that promotes monogamous, safe sex. Well, it's an old way of thinking that perhaps needs to be brought back again. At least we need to consider the virtue of limited sexual partners. The price of not considering this virtue, if you will, is perhaps a lifetime of suffering, albeit for some a very, very short lifetime.

I have to admit that that pamphlet handed to me on Boylston Street had some good points. For example, it emphasized the need to reduce or eliminate the use of drugs and alcohol from our lives, because alcohol damages the immune system and it can impair our judgment when we most need to make sound decisions.

The pamphlet also emphasized the need for improving health, including eating properly, exercising frequently, and seeing a doctor regularly. As a solution to the problem of abstinence in cases where you don't want to abstain, the pamphlet suggested using your imagination. All of the suggestions were safe and healthy for you. This information was presented well, and there was no use of vulgar language to get the points across. If only the entire pamphlet had been prepared in this manner, I would be in favor of its use in school systems.

One final point: the pamphlet also made it clear that we have the choice to be informed, aware of ourselves and responsible. If we choose not to be, we may, in the case of AIDS, be putting a loaded revolver to our heads and at the same time impacting those with whom we come into closest contact.

'Good Eggs' decorating contest open to all

How do you transform a colorful Easter egg into a tidy nest egg? It can be as easy as "rustling up a couple of eggs" with The Good Egg Decorating Competition charity fundraiser event.

Devised by the makers of PAAS, the world's oldest brand of Easter egg coloring kits, the competition is a sure-fire fundraiser for schools, fraternities, sororities or scout troops.

This time of year, coloring and decorating eggs is a traditional pastime in many homes, and a favorite craft activity for art classes and children's organizations. All you need is a few "Good Eggs" to sponsor your egg creations with a donation.

So follow these simple suggestions from the makers of PAAS and put your artistic talents to work for a favorite charity.

The Good Egg Decorating Competition can be held by any age group, from elementary school students to college art students.

To enter, all a participant needs is an egg coloring kit, the decorations of his or her choice, a little imagination — and one or more sponsors who pledge a minimum fee to the charity.

Contest rules may be as simple or "eggs-stravagant" as the organizers determine. For example, art students might be judged on coloring technique or other specific artistic criteria.

Depending on the age and artistic acumen of the participants, categories for judging finished egg creations might include most colorful, brightest, imaginative, funniest, most romantic and most traditional.

Entrants may decorate their eggs individually at home, or participate jointly at a specified location as part of the contest. If eggs will be decorated as part of the event, be sure each participant is instructed to bring at least one egg-coloring kit, blunt-nose scissors, non-toxic glue, felt-tip pens, paper, buttons and whatever else they may wish to use. You may want to recommend cold-water egg-coloring kits.

To organize a Good Egg competition, the first step is to choose a charity and a contest committee. Your selected charity should be contacted for approval before any further contest plans are executed.

Six committee members are necessary to handle specific duties: posters, publicity, exhibition site, installation, judging and treasurer. The committee determines the date of the contest judging and allotted time period for contestants to raise sponsors and decorate an egg. Unless you are planning a one-day marathon event or speed contest, a two-week period is suggested.

The committee member in charge of contest judging should round up a jury of three to five people. Likely candidates are art teachers or professors, local amateur artists and the art critic of the local paper. (For elementary school or other children's organizations, you may consider dividing contestants into appropriate age groups for judging.)

The committee member in charge of installation sets up the decorated eggs, each accompanied by a card giving the name of the artist and the names of the sponsors. The committee should also select and obtain the site to exhibit the decorated eggs, such as a library, school gym or display case or reception area.

Registration instructions and contest rules should fit on one typewritten page. Be sure to include competition closing date, where and to whom the decorated eggs are to be delivered, and to whom the sponsor money is to be delivered.

The information sheet should be distributed to all the members of the participating club, school or class. A tear-off section at the bottom of the page should have space for the entrant's name, address, age, and the names of sponsors.

Remember that the more the contest is publicized, the more entrants and donor-sponsors will participate. Informational posters can be designed and donated by parents or children, and placed in strategic areas in the school, public library and in shop windows. A news release should be sent to the local paper and to the public service directors of radio and TV stations. It should name the sponsoring organization and give other pertinent information to encourage people to sponsor entrants. Be certain to name the cause of charity to which the money will be donated.

A photograph of all the entrants holding their decorated eggs, with a spokesperson or executive director from the charitable organization, may be taken and sent to community papers. Be certain the caption names the sum of money these "Good Eggs" raised for charity.

So who said that Easter eggs are all hard-boiled?

Boston, other cities rush to attract conventions

By Lulx Overbea
Staff writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

Boston is working hard to become a major convention city.

It is rebuilding and enlarging its John B. Hynes Veterans Memorial Convention Center, now scheduled to reopen in January 1988.

"Our goal is to make Boston at least No. 5," says the center's executive director, Francis X. Joyce. Boston would then trail only New York, Chicago, Atlanta, and Washington.

Why do so many communities want convention halls?

"A convention center brings money into a city," says Mel Hosansky, editor of Conventions and Meetings magazine, which is read by more than 80,000 meeting planners across the United States. "Ten years ago only 20 to 30 cities hosted most of the nation's conventions, large or small. Today with nearly 300 cities actively involved in seeking meetings, many of them are struggling to break even.

"They all see convention centers as generators of business and jobs, as magnets that attract hotels, restaurants, commercial areas, and tourists," Mr. Hosansky says. "They generate taxes. Some cities accept the centers as deficit operations, but reason that their benefits outweigh this liability."

Even with its new capacity, Hynes has a drawback. With 218,000 square feet of exhibit space, it still will be only the nation's 35th largest center. New York City's new Javits Convention Center, which opened last April, can accommodate more than 90,000 people. Chicago's McCormick Place with its new annex is the largest.

Both New York and Chicago operate at a deficit, although they each bring more than $1.4 billion in convention spending to their cities.

The Javits Center, designed by I. M. Pei & Partners and called the "Crystal Palace," cost $486.2 million to build, although planned for $375 million. It was completed two years behind schedule.

The 12-member board of McCormick Place was dismissed because the new annex cost $312 million, well above a projected $60 million.

Cities like San Diego, San Francisco, and Philadelphia face possible cost overruns, too, as they carry out plans to build or increase capacity and improve facilities.

R. NORMAN MATHENY - STAFF

Boston is rebuilding its Hynes center

On the West Coast, San Francisco, Anaheim, and Los Angeles contemplate enlarging their facilities. San Diego, in the process of developing a new center, faces impatient hotel and tourist interests that want a larger facility built at a faster pace than the five years and 200,000 square feet planned.

Philadelphia, Denver, and Miami seek new facilities, but costs, location, and other problems are stalling action.

Boston is particularly attractive as a convention center, Hosansky says. "With its economic growth, its colleges, and its cultural institutions, Boston is sophisticated," he says. "It offers good catering. Its computer capability for high-tech programs appeals to meeting planners."

But not all observers share executive director Joyce's enthusiasm for the new Hynes, which is named for a former Boston mayor. Convention centers invariably cost more than anticipated and usually operate in the red, critics say. A cover article in a recent issue of Boston magazine lists three criticisms of the Hynes: renovation is too costly; the center will operate at a $24 million annual deficit, and it is still too small to attract the largest conventions.

Nevertheless, Joyce says the 1988 reopening of the Hynes will spell progress for Boston. A hotel building boom has tripled nearby hotel rooms from 2,000 to 6,000, he says. And another 7,000 rooms are downtown. Since the Hynes closed, the occupancy rate in downtown hotels has actually increased from 67 to 68 percent, according to Boston magazine.

In addition, the Massachusetts Convention Center Authority, which controls Hynes, has organized a unit to market Massachusetts as a host state for meetings of all sizes. It promotes the state through offices in Washington, New York, and Chicago.

Local critics and "watchdogs" over tax funds do not view Hynes through the eyes of Joyce or Hosansky, however. They see taxpayers holding the bag for a perennial loser, although Joyce forecasts a $40 million annual bonanza for the state from hotel and room taxes.

Joyce sings his own sour note, too. He faces a projected first-year deficit of $3.3 million, well above the $800,000 authorized by the state for a year's operations.

Woodchips

By ANTHONY MANCONI

I was called for jury duty and, because of my family's vast experience on "both" sides of the "bench" in the courts of law, I was told to report an hour earlier and take over in case the judge didn't show up. A great-grandfather was a judge in West Virginia. A mountaineer was before him for running an illegal still. "I see that your name is Joshua," the judge said. "Tell me are you the Joshua who made the sun stand still? " "No, your honor," the bearded old gentleman replied, "I'm the Joshua who made the "moonshine still."

An uncle of mine (on my father's side of the family) received a suspended sentence for stealing a horse. He was to be "hung." He was led to the gallows early one morning and it was discovered that someone stole the rope during the night. My Uncle Armando, dropped to his knees and with eyes raised and arms outstretched shouted, "Glory be, no noose is good noose! "

My grandmother was being examined as a prospective juror. "Do you know the lawyer for the defense? " "Yes, and he's a crook." "Do you know the attorney for the plaintiff? " "Yes, and he's a crook, too! " The judge called both men to the bench and whispered, "If either of you ask that woman if she knows me, I'll find both of you in contempt of court! "

Three eminent members of the bar when reviewing my credentials handed down their unanimous opinion saying, "Cows may come and cows may go, but the 'bull' in Woodchips goes on forever. It was signed by these members of the bar: Jeremiah Gerry, Reardon's Bar, Cum Laude, John Avalone, Mickey's Bar, Cum Louder, and Roger Moore of Donnie Kyle's Dublin.

Folks, please join me in extending a warm welcome to Noel and his lovely wife Catherine Walsh from Dublin, Ireland. They are here in America because of Harvard's swimming coach's invitation to their son Shane, who is the 1500 meter swimming champion of Ireland. Shane is 18-years-old and swims in the Harvard pool twice a day — 5 a.m. and 2 in the afternoon. Remember the name Shane Walsh, for he may win a Gold Olympic Medal soon. His brother, Owen, is here also. He is an accomplished pianist and also an actor hoping someday to be a member of the famed Abbey Theater.

I was proud to hear Bob Burns, Jimmy Quinno and Joe Altavesta (all of the Woburn Elks) say, "Woodchipper, you ought to be on the stage." But I didn't like it when they added, "the first stage out of town." Did you know that Sunday drivers are actually Friday drivers trying to find a place to park their cars? The man who brags that he never made a mistake invariably has a wife who "did."

Father John Crispo said to Angelo Quagenti, "It's nice to see you attending church again. Is it because of my sermons? " Angelo replied, "Not yours Father, my wife's." Many of you have seen identification cards that read, "I am a Catholic — in case of an accident call a priest." Well, my cousin Tom thinks he is special. He carries a card that reads, "I am an 'important' Catholic — in case of an accident call a Bishop."

"No thank you I'll stay home," said Rowan Fitzgerald when I asked him to come with me and my family on a visit to the Stone Zoo in Stoneham. "When I asked Rowan why he wouldn't come he said, "My eldest daughter does the kangaroo walk, my second daughter talks like a parrot, my son laughs like a hyena, my wife watches me like a hawk and my mother-in-law says I'm an old gorilla. So, when I go anywhere I want a change of scenery..."

My late dear mother told me that as a little girl in Ireland, she used to amuse herself by holding a stick across a gateway that the sheep had to pass through. After the first few sheep had jumped over the stick she took it away; but all the other sheep leaped over an imaginary barrier at the gateway. They jumped simply because the others had jumped before them. My mother always told me and my brothers and sisters, "Don't do something because others are doing it — do it because you honestly believe that it's the right and decent thing to do."

"A halo doesn't have to slip very far to become a noose." Advice for executives over 50: "Keep an open mind and a closed refrigerator." Church bulletin: "Chicken dinner tonight — come in for a 'Wing and a Prayer.' " Folks, if things go wrong and you "cry" - you have already lost — but, if things go wrong and you "try," "Rejoice! " for you have already "Won! " Thank you Jimmy Gerry and your lovely wife Bethsy for starting a Woodchips fan club in Lynnfield. Their beautiful daughter Suzanne is the secretary and some of the members are Bethsy Hart, Joe Malloy, Lil Catalino, Del Plumbly, John LaForte, Catherine and Noel Walsh and their sons Owen and Shane.

You don't have to live in Lynnfield to be a member, the only requirement is that you are not afraid to laugh. Other fans are Emily Fraher and her daughters, Louise Patricia and Carol of Woburn, also Father Charles Amadore of St. Barbara's, Fr. Frank McFarland (who read my Mother's Day poem on radio), Frank Carley and his beautiful daughter Barbara of Burlington, Connie Johnson of Honeycomb, Wakefield, Robert Skelly and Arthur and Marie Marino of Stoneham, Capt. Dan Gately of Woburn and Susan Duff of Winchester.

Congratulations to Leigh Hastings and Ray Mercuri for being chosen Junior Rotarians by the Wilmington Rotary Club. Woodchips' wonderful citizens award for this week goes to Gerald Moynihan of the North Reading Lumber Company for his generous donation to Elva Pawle and Saralyn Spires in behalf of the Arts Workshop for Children.

An old termite was having a difficult time on a mahogany bar. He noticed a group of termites apparently having a much easier time at the other end so it "waddled" down to them and said, "Pardon me, but is the 'bar-tender' here? " After that one, Jimmy Gerry expects a flood of resignations from the Woodchipper's Fan Club.

Thank Heaven for Little Boys

A cyclone hit the bedroom,
clothes are on the floor,
Larry Bird's poster is taped to the closet door.
The living room chairs and sofa are sagging with wear,
The refrigerator shelves are almost always bare.
The bathroom is always busy,
there's water everywhere,
The time spent in the shower just isn't fair.
Our house is full of gloves and balls and never-ending noise,
I know you must have guessed it, we have a family of boys.

Cleaning

From S-4

open land and keep it clean for the time being.

Undeveloped land within the greater Boston megalopolis seems to attract trash like iron filings to a magnet — for who is going to police, comb, and groom empty acres of open space?

The crest of the Bennett Street hill, a currently March wind-swept spot of granite, woods, sod and soil, is graced with a bright orange two-family birdhouse and occasional thickets of cockspur hawthorn, shrubs which help to conceal the litter of auto engine parts, iron bedstead and springs and a dump-hole containing, among other assorted rubbish, a vagrant trio of discarded shoes and a colossal pair of running shorts, torn and stretched somehow to inconceivable size.

None of this is visible from the street. The hawthorn and underlying heaps of trash can be seen only by climbing the hill which yields what may be one of the best views in Wakefield.

From the top of the site you can see Nazareth Academy and various other pine-clad slopes. Add another legal building height of 40 feet to the hill (various developer; schemes have included 18- to 43-unit buildings on the approximate acre and a half plot, according to neighborhood activist and mechanical engineer Doug Bridge) and it is probable you could see Boston's skyline, the Atlantic Ocean and the south-lying White Mountains.

Last spring, the neighbors said they felt triumphant with the decision by the Wakefield Appeals Board — later approved by Town Meeting — to institute a two-year moratorium on any new multiple unit residential buildings except those already in the legal process.

Esther Nowell, one of the neighbors and a Wakefield activist already well-known in town, region and Beacon Hill for her championship of animal rights, had suggested that if the win went to the residents they should clean up that visible part of the property which fronts on Bennett Street.

They hoped to neaten the patch of open land, home to whatever spermophiles (chipmunks, gophers and the like) and other wildlife which may remain — and beautify their own neighborhood pocket of woods.

Until they began, however, they had no idea what the task would entail. "The land had never been cleaned in the eight years I've lived here," said soprano Lorraine Woods-Barrett.

And it was no cursory bend-and-stoop operation to pick up a few pieces of wind-blown papers. "Once we started digging under the leaves," she continued, "we came up with 50 trash bags full of broken glass from beer and wine bottles" (Mrs. Nowell cautioned Jason Woods carefully to gather all the shards to prevent injury to wild and domestic animals' paws), "all kinds of plastic debris, a full-size mattress under the leaves, rusty springs, electrical insulators, piles of rotting, nail-studded wood, window screens."

In addition to the 50 trash bags-full left out for municipal collection, Doug Bridge said, he twice filled his hatchback to haul off the larger items.

This year, the group decided to start spring-cleaning even earlier — on the first day of spring, in fact.

But when the team rose a little beyond dawn to cast a sleepy eye on their task, they were greeted by a carpet of white. It was clear that nature had pre-empted them with a lovely but fragile, thin blanket of snow which had come like a gentle thief in the night — to beautify and soften the landscape — and cover the trash they had planned to clean up.

Some were grateful for the respite. Jerry Woods said he rolled over, like February's groundhog, and went back to sleep. Spring's '87 debut continued with sleet, patches of hail, and a raw, bone-chilling wind. As Jerry continued to snooze, Mrs. Nowell announced cancellation of Saturday's clean-up plans and hoped for better weather on Sunday.

Sunday dawned a little better — but not good enough to suit the group's needs. So the spit-and-polish team looks forward with optimism to this weekend — and, despite intimate familiarity with New England weather — hopes at least they'll be able to spring clean the little patch of woods before it's time to break out the May wine and woodruff.

Children with arthritis need special attention

Any parent will tell you that raising children has its difficult moments. For parents with arthritis, caring for young children can be especially trying, according to the Arthritis Foundation.

Child care for the parent with arthritis requires careful planning as well as knowledge about how to protect arthritis joints, simplify work and conserve energy. Simple things, such as rearranging the furniture or making use of time-saving appliances, can make a big difference. When shopping for your child's clothes and furniture, choose them with your comfort, as well as your child's, in mind. Look for the same labor-saving devices in your child's clothes as you do in your own, such as Velcro buttons or stretch fabrics.

The Massachusetts Chapter of the Arthritis Foundation offers support groups which help people with arthritis learn to cope with child care problems and other challenges they face. For more information, call 1-800-882-1464, or write The Massachusetts Chapter of the Arthritis Foundation, 124 Watertown Street, Watertown, Ma. 02172.

Raising Arizona Burglar

Raising Arizona Starring Nicolas Cage, Holly Hunter, John Goodman, William Forsythe. Directed by Joel Coen. Produced by Ethan Coen. Written by the Coens. Rated PG-13 (profanity, violence).

A movie about parenting and kidnapping is not exactly run of the mill stuff, but then again, the Coen brothers' last movie, Blood Simple didn't really fit into the constraints of a definition either.

Dense, often unyieldingly funny and unabashedly strange, Raising Arizona is the kind of movie you could watch more than once and catch something new each time. It's kind of like watching Howard Hawk's His Girl Friday and hearing something in the overlapping dialogue you may have missed the time before. Only in this film it's the visuals which overlap. Director Joel Coen had some fun with the camera, and sometimes images flash across the screen so quickly that you barely register them before he goes on to the next bit.

At the core of this mad-cap adventure is a love story that is treated quite seriously, almost tenderly. Nicolas Cage plays a stick-up man with a weakness for convenience stores who is in jail so often he has a chance to fall in love with a police officer (Holly Hunter). When the two marry and discover they can't have children, they decide to lift one of the five newborn Arizona quints, hence the title. Into this scam come two baby-faced convicts with their own ideas for the blonde, gurgling babe and one road-hog-from-hell who plans on rescuing the child in order to ransom him back to the parents. There are other peripheral folks who enter into the story, all equally as unusual, but in the center of all the madness is this sweet child that they all manage to fall in love with.

The only jarring note in the film is Randall "Tex" Cobb as the grimey biker who plans on trading the kid in for money. It's as if he cruised in from another movie. Coen, who co-wrote the film with his brother Ethan, almost pulls this bit off, but it isn't smooth enough. The biker is as strange as the other oddball characters, but he is too harsh for a film that is probably much sweeter than the Coens wanted to admit.

Burglar Starring Whoopie Goldberg, Bob Goldthwait, G.W. Bailey, Lesley Ann Warren. Directed by Hugh Wilson. Produced by Kevin McCormick, Michael Hirsh. Screenplay by Wilson, Matthew Weisman, Joseph Loeb III. Rated R (profanity, violence).

There is one good thing you can say about Whoopi Goldberg's third cinematic outing, and that is comedian Bob Goldthwait. Otherwise you can chalk Burglar up as one of those movies you might watch when it comes to cable, but only if they are repeating "Moonlighting" that night.

Goldberg plays a bookstore owner who is forced back into her old line of work, cat burglary, by a nasty retired cop who has blown his pension. G.W. Bailey as the cop has a pair of gloves that Goldberg used in a robbery years before, and he threatens to blow the whistle if she doesn't pay him off. One of her first jobs involves her with a shady dentist, Lesley Ann Warren, who overstylizes her role until it is nearly a caricature.

One thing leads to another and soon Goldberg is involved in a murder. Upon investigating the murder to try and clear herself of any involvement, she stumbles onto a counterfeit ring, a sub-plot that is never properly fleshed-out or explained.

What is ironic about this picture is that while it is not as loosely structured nor quite as rambling as Goldberg's last flick, Jumpin' Jack Flash, it is also not as funny. The plot behind Flash was silly and didn't always make sense, but there were enough funny bits peppered throughout so that at least there were some chuckles. But in this tired, dull film, the only time there is a sizzle on-screen is when Goldthwait shows up. This comedian's schtick is that he screams. You've probably seen him, with his wild hair and hyperkinectic act. Well, for the role of Goldberg's best friend, he reeled in his mania just enough so that you can understand most of his rantings, which are very funny. Too bad that can't be said about the rest of the film.

Short Takes

Lily, playing at the Coolidge Corner Moviehouse, documents the work that went into Lily Tomlin's successful Broadway show, "The Search for Intelligent Life in the Universe." While the film obviously suffers from a low budget, it really does give you a sense of how Tomlin builds her characters and is often quite funny. No Rating. * * *

Street Smart's plot about truth imitating art has been borrowed from half-a-dozen TV shows and Christopher Reeve looks as uncomfortable as he is unconvincing as a cool, streetwise journalist. Reeve's made-up magazine article about a pimp brings the real world crashing down around him, only he isn't a good enough actor to pick up the pieces. Rated R. *

The Gospel According to Vic, a Scottish import starring the affable Tom Conti, is a quirky, endearing comedy that loses itself in a grand plot about religion versus reason. However, it is richly detailed, full of off-beat humor and peopled with such an unusual cast of characters that it is really quite amusing. Rated PG-13. * * *

Witchboard spins a yarn about restless spirits, an eerie house and a ouija board misused by Yuppies. While it gets kind of silly, the pace isn't bad, there are some truly tense moments and the director had a few tricks up his sleeve that most low-budget filmmakers don't bother with. Rated R. * *

Death Before Dishonor is a boorish, boring, rambling story about marines combating international terrorists. It's not just a lousy movie with poor production values, it is unabashedly dull. Rated R. x

Tin Men are the names given to aluminum siding salesmen in the '60's, played by Danny Devito and Richard Dreyfuss. As touching as it is funny, the dialogue fairly crackles with fast-paced verbage and barbing insults before it segues into an endearing love story. What's unusual for a comedy is that the plot has as much heart as it has humor. Rated R.* * * ½

Square Dance is a little picture about a young girl facing adulthood in Texas that is sweet enough, but gets bogged down in a meandering plot. However, Rob Lowe should get credit for trying something different from his usual heart throb roles. He plays a handsome, but retarded young man who steals the heart of the blossoming teenage girl. Rated PG-13.* * ½

Working Girls is a compassionate, funny, realistic look at a day in the life of a prostitute that gives us an idea of her lifestyle without moralizing. While this is not a documentary, it has a very realistic feel to it, and is as entertaining as educational. No rating. * * * *

Scene of the Crime reveals Catherine Deneuve at her most sensual in this fascinating study of suppressed passions and murder, set against the golden backdrop of the French countryside. This is a film that can be taken on many levels, with its Oedipal undercurrents and air of mystery, so it should appeal to anyone not afraid of sub-titles. Rated R. * * *½

Marlene, a documentary about the infamous Dietrich, is a pleasant stroll down memory lane, but one walks away from the film knowing little more about the blonde star than when one walked in. Unfortunately, the actress, now in her late 80's, would not allow director Maximilian Schell to film her face, so we hear her voice while watching old film clips and stills. It is interesting, but not the blockbuster we anticipated. Not rated. * *½

Angel Heart is a strange, provocative, somewhat inaccessible film about a detective who crosses into the occult world of Cajun voodoo. It is certainly not going to be everyone's cup of tea, although there are a lot of things to like in this film, namely the acting and originality. Unfortunately, director Alan Parker pushes too hard, and it becomes more and more difficult to believe in the story and its characters. Rated R. * * *

Black Widow is an odd mix of Theresa Russell's crackling sexuality, a plot full of murder and mystery, direction that is too soft and a backdrop that is too pretty. While it isn't a bad psychological drama, the elements don't quite gel. However, Russell, who plays four characters, rises above her surroundings in a stellar performance as the woman who mates, and then kills. Rated R. * * *

CHRISTOPHER REEVE as journalist Jonathan Fisher, giving his "Street Smart" television report from a corner of 42nd Street.

Supplement to Daily Times — Chronicle (Woburn, Reading, Winchester, Burlington, Wakefield), Lynnfield Villager, No. Reading Transcript, Wilmington & Tewksbury Town Crier, Stoneham Independent

Our interests are new business developments and practices in the Greater Middlesex East area as well as Eastern Massachusetts. Press releases and notices are welcome. We focus on an issue that is relevant, especially as businesses deal with the need to lay-off long-time workers and trim down to respond to new competitive challenges. It is very difficult these days for a company to guarantee life-time employment. Thus older workers are going to find themselves looking for new jobs. The first article deals with this situation.

AGE DISCRIMINATION STILL EXISTS

"There is no denying that Age Discrimination still exists in today's workplace, but many jobs are still available for older workers," states Jack Erdlen, President of Management Dimensions, Inc. (MDI), an outplacement and Career search consulting firm located in Wellesley. "Employers are seeking experienced professionals to fill full-time positions, as well as retirees to handle part-time situations," he insists.

"Most companies realize the costly effects of age discrimination in terms of fines, penalties, back-pay awards, and all the notoriety that it nourishes in poor publicity and employee relations," Erdlen explains. "They have strict policies and procedures forbidding such actions, but, at times, it is difficult to overcome the prejudices of individual managers and supervisors. Good judgment is sometimes cast aside in the name of a 'lean and mean' management style that translates into cutbacks of higher salaried personnel who are usually the older employees. Since layoffs are designed to reduce payroll costs, the elimination of the higher paid workers means that fewer people will have to be terminated. Also, pension and benefit programs will not be as costly."

MDI provides job hunting and career counseling services for professional candidates, for individuals and corporate clients. Its principals have advised thousands of candidates in knowing and understanding the process of changing jobs.

On the positive side, Erdlen notes that "the senior job hunter does have options available, whether he (she) is unemployed or just looking to change positions. As the demand for qualified personnel has expanded, opportunities have become available at all levels of exempt and non-exempt positions."

Erdlen suggests the following course of action to everyone who is over 50 and having difficulty with a job search:

PLACE YOUR EMPHASIS ON NETWORKING TO OBTAIN INTERVIEWS — A recommendation from a friend or acquaintance will go a long way toward getting your foot in the door.

KEEP A POSITIVE ATTITUDE — If you have performed well in your previous position, there is no reason to doubt your abilities. You must exude confidence.

INDICATE FLEXIBILITY — in job assignments, work schedule, and salary requirements. Be sensitive to the person who feels that "you can't teach an old dog new tricks."

DEMONSTRATE ENTHUSIASM AND WILLINGNESS TO WORK — You do not want to give the impression that you are looking for a place to roost until retirement. Many companies already have too many current employees that fit this description.

PROVIDE OUTSTANDING REFERENCES with an emphasis on senior or executive referrals. Having access to such people can be impressive and their opinions will carry influence with potential employers.

CONSIDER A PART-TIME OR CONSULTING JOB TO GAIN EXPOSURE TO A COMPANY — Register with temporary agencies and try to identify corporations with their own temporary workforce. Such arrangements present ideal situations for both parties.

Likewise, there are several "Don'ts" which Erdlen claims must be observed if senior candidates are to be successful in their job hunting. Among them are:

DON'T CRITICIZE YOUR PRESENT OR PREVIOUS EMPLOYER — This dialogue wears thin very quickly. Companies want to know how you are going to help them and not listen to bitter tirades about your previous boss.

DON'T USE PHRASES THAT MIGHT GIVE THE IMPRESSION THAT YOU ARE LIVING IN THE PAST — such as "At ABC, we did it this way"; "ABC had the best this or that"; "It wasn't that way when I started out."

DON'T PLACE RESTRICTIONS ON COMMUTING TIME OR LOCATION REQUIREMENTS — unless absolutely necessary. Obtain the interview, get the offer, then make a decision.

DON'T ALLOW ANYONE'S PREJUDICES ABOUT COMPANIES TO AFFECT YOUR JOB SEARCH — What is impossible to one person could be a challenge for you. Investigate every job lead and then make a determination based on your interests and preferences.

"Fast food restaurants, retailers, supermarket chains, and other industries have demonstrated their willingness to hire retirees and older workers," Erdlen asserts. "Other firms have followed their lead because it is the best proof that they do not discriminate because of age. While many of these jobs are in the lower level category, they do afford some income and the chance for progression later."

"There are many other situations in which an employer would prefer to hire older workers," argues Erdlen. "They represent experience and the ability to handle pressure. Compared to younger candidates, they require a limited amount of orientation and are more likely to remain in their positions for an extended period of time. Their work habits are most commendable, they will tolerate under-employment, and they are less likely to be impatient and push their supervisors for promotions. It is up to the individual to remind the employer of these important factors and demonstrate a job awareness at the time of the interview."

ENTREPRENEURIAL NATURE

The Massachusetts College of Art's Office of Career Resources invites you to attend the following seminars:

THE ENTREPRENEURIAL SPIRIT BY JOANNA TAMER, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8 — This seminar will explore the nature of the entrepreneur, whether free-lance, consultant, or small business owner. Rather than reviewing the operational aspects of this risky kind of business, we will discuss the more subtle effects of professional freedom: lifestyle changes, emotional highs and lows, loneliness, lack of external structure, and the spiritual meaning to be found in this freedom.

ACHIEVING SUCCESSFUL PRESENTATIONS BY CLAUDYNE WILDER, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15 — This seminar will explain how to feel comfortable as you make your presentation. It will show you how to present your ideas and portfolio convincingly, how to prepare, organize and present your materials and how to bring your presentation to a successful conclusion.

Both seminars will be held at the Massachusetts College of Art, 621 Huntington Avenue, Boston, Room T659. There will be a reception with the speaker from 6 to 7 p.m. and the seminar will be from 7 to 9 p.m.

Pre-registration is not necessary, there will be a $5.00 charge collected at the door.

For more information, contact: Margaret Johnson, Director, Office of Career Resources, Massachusetts College of Art, 621 Huntington Avenue, Boston, MA. 02115 (telephone 232-1555, ext. 384).

SUBSTANCE ABUSE IN WORKPLACE

On April 22, the Human Resources Collaborative will hold a day-long symposium at the Kings Grant Inn, Danvers, on "How to Effectively Combat Substance Abuse in the Workplace."

Information will be geared to the needs of supervisors, managers and human resources personnel from firms of all sizes. Course content, comprehensive yet in-depth, will be presented through lectures, videos, group discussions, case histories, role playing and panel discussions with recovering alcohol and drug abusers.

The Human Resources Collaborative is a network of recovering business people and professionals in the alcoholism and drug addiction treatment field. Symposium speakers are affiliated with leading treatment centers, hospitals and corporate intervention programs, and have extensive experience with substance abusers, employee assistance programs and labor-management issues.

For information or registration call (617) 581-6467.

College students studying abroad offered work-study

College students can have their study abroad fees reduced by up to $1,500 under a new Work Study program offered by the American Institute Gor Foreign Study of Greenwich, Connecticut.

Students participating in AIFS college level programs in London, Paris and Salzburg can reduce their fees by working as child care assistants while they attend school. In exchange for living with European families and assisting with the child care for 15-20 hours per week, students receive pocket money, share in foreign friendships, improve their language skills and gain a new cultural understanding of life overseas.

"This new Work/Study opportunity will make a year of study abroad affordable to thousands of students," said Henry C. Kahn, President of the Institute. "It is now less expensive to study in London under this new plan than in most private U.S. colleges."

The Institute also offers full time child care positions without college study in Britain and Germany.

The American Institute For Foreign Study has provided overseas education programs for over 300,000 participants since it was founded in 1964. The Institute is a subsidiary of AIFS, Inc., a publicly owned company.

Trivia

Humans aren't the only ones with babysitters, says Ranger Rick magazine. If a mother animal has to hunt, she will often leave her young with an "auntie" or teenage animal. Apparently, it is a shared duty and animal sitters don't get paid.
